Subject: Obama's Staged revival meeting????
Date: 02/10/2009 07:27 PM

I thought the campaigning was over and Soetoro said "I WON, SO DO AS I SAY"!!! Here we have the "evil one" again making himself out to be "the messiah" by staging a revival meeting in Florida.....then having the media report on his ability to save a woman from being homeless!!! This is such a joke!! Make sure you read the whole thing including Ms. Malkin's update and circulate this far and wide so people might know what the USURPER is still up to!!!! This is deceit at its best....just how he got elected!!! Jackie:)

Obama's Ft. Myers revival meeting; Update: Henrietta and Julio

By Michelle Malkin • February 10, 2009 02:44 PM

Puke advisory warning...new update: Mrs. Hughes gets a house...

If you follow me on Twitter, you saw my comment earlier this afternoon about the savior-based moment in Ft. Myers this afternoon between President Obama and a woman named Henrietta Hughes — who demanded that Obama give her a home with her own bathroom and kitchen.

The entire event was like a revival meeting. Naturally, I'm already being attacked as heartless for questioning the entitlement culture. Wrapping up a column on this for tomorrow.

JWF and Philip Klein weigh in.

We are all Peggy the Moocher now.

Another Obama worshiper at the Ft. Myers revival meeting. "Gracious God!"

"I love you, Barack" woman. Creepy:

Update: Henrietta Hughes gets a house

By Michelle Malkin • February 10, 2009 04:31 PM

Ask at an Obama revival meeting and ye shall receive:

> Henrietta Hughes was offered a home by Chene Thompson, wife of State Representative Nick Thompson, who heard the homeless woman's pleas for help to President Obama before a local and national crowd.
>
> Advertisement
>
> The house is in LaBelle, the first home [Chene] Thompson bought after law school. She told Hughes, "Just give me the opportunity to help you."
>
> Hughes broke down in front of thousands when she told the president that she and her son have been homeless for more than a year. They are living in a pickup truck.
>
> Obama hugged her after she asked her question and said his staff would help. A staffer later gave her a card to the head of the housing authority and she was told he would help her.

Reader Erik E. has questions. Careful, Erik. You are committing sacrilege. Dissent is unpatriotic. And cruel.

> You know you cannot just "enter" an Obama town hall meeting. They give out tickets in advance. Who gets the tickets? People who stand in line and wait. Who tells people when and where Obama will appear next? Certainly not the Secret Service who has to protect this man. Not the MSM, who are too busy telling us how great he is without asking any critical questions.
>
> Sooooo... how does a 61 year-old homeless woman who's living in a pickup truck with her son JUST HAPPEN to get a ticket so she can VERY PUBLICALLY ask Prez. Obama for a HOUSE? Anyone? Who pushes her up on stage? She's right at the front of the crowd. Did she just happen to get a seat there?
>
> Now, within moments of this happening, it's trumpeted all over the news. AND, surprise, surprise, the wife of State Representative Nick Thompson, Chene Thompson JUST HAPPENS to have a spare house worth $150,000 lying around, so she GIVES it to this unemployed, homeless, living-in-a-truck woman. They've been homeless for "more than a year", which coincidentally, predates the current housing and banking crisis by quite a while. How did they learn about the "Obama Town Hall and Tent Revival"? Were homeless people simply rounded up? Did someone pre-canvas the area in search of "great, tear-jerking stories"? Of all the people in the audience, SHE'S one of the ones Obama chooses to ask a question?
>
> BTW-the taxes which will be charged on this "free house" will bankrupt the poor woman. Taxes are levied based on the home's assessed value, not on the basis of it being a "free gift".
>
> On a second, double-snort, the last guy who gets to ask a question JUST HAPPENS to be a 19-year-old kid of Hispanic descent who's going to Edison State College (free tuition perhaps for in-state students?) and has worked at McDonalds for FOUR AND A HALF YEARS. By my math, he started working there when he was 14! Florida child-labor law infraction, anyone? Now, having worked at McDs several times in my past I can say that they DO offer health care plans. You have to PAY for it, just like everyone else in the country does. It's OPTIONAL. It's not a God-given right.
>
> ...Do the Thompsons get to claim this as a charitable tax deduction against their (probably) considerable 2009 income? How many houses do they own?
>
> Is there anyone left in the media who will ask these questions? Ever?

Silence! Do not question Dear Leader.
