

The National Network of Libraries of Medicine (NN/LM), funded by the National Library of Medicine, serves the United States through nearly 6,000 member organizations and eight Regional Medical Libraries (RMLs).

Each RML provides services to strengthen awareness, access and use of online information resources by health professionals and the public.

The Pacific Northwest Region (PNR) includes Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington. The University of Washington Health Sciences Library has served as the Regional Medical Library since 1968.

"[RML] staff have been great about explaining resources, answering questions, and making introductions with others in the region."

Pam McBride
Grants Coordinator
Clearwater Valley Hospital

Resource Sharing

DOCLINE[®] and LoansomeDoc[®] systems allow Network libraries to efficiently borrow, lend and deliver articles, books and audiovisuals.

Awareness

PNR News - news and announcements from the RML.
nnlm.gov/pnr - links to health information services, funding and more.

Promotion and PR

Get support for resources and events that promote quality health information for consumers and health professionals.

Partnership

Partner with other Network member organizations to expand resources, share ideas, build cooperation and visibility in the community, and stretch budget dollars.

Good health information is good insurance!

"Funding for special projects has improved access to health information in Alaska. Having close personal contact with the staff of the [RML] has been a very valuable resource."
