

World War II tide disaster. “The tide that failed” during the US Marine amphibious landing at Tarawa, November 20, 1943. Unexpectedly low water stranded United States landing craft on coral reefs more than 500 m from shore, leaving Marines to wade in against withering Japanese defensive fire. The blue curve is a hindcast based on modern tidal measurements, unavailable to military planners during the war.