

Except for a small amount of energy released by radioactive materials deep within the Earth, all the processes that take place within our planet can be traced back to the energy derived from the Sun. The Earth intercepts only about one half of one-billionth of the total solar energy.

