New Mexico Awarded $737,526 to regulate coal mine reclamation

OSM funds programs to protect people and environment during coal mining

(WASHINGTON) – Interior Secretary Gale Norton today announced that the Interior Department's Office of Surface Mining has awarded New Mexico $737,526 as initial funding for the state's FY2004 Administration and Enforcement grant.

“This grant, combined with state matching funds, will support New Mexico's program to inspect active coal mines and enforce Surface Mining Act requirements to protect people and the environment during mining and ensure prompt land restoration afterward,” said Norton.

The Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977, the law that regulates coal mining throughout the country, established a coordinated effort between the states and the federal government to prevent abuses that characterized surface coal mining in the past. The Law gives states authority to regulate active coal mining and also fund reclamation of abandoned mine problems.

The OSM grant, together with state matching funds, will cover costs of salary and fringe benefits for 10 employees involved in the regulation of active coal mines. New Mexico has 15 active units to inspect and annual coal production of 17 million tons.
