

American Horticultural Society

The American Horticultural Society (AHS) is one of the oldest national member-based gardening organizations in North America. Through its educational programs, publications, and awards, the AHS advocates earth-friendly gardening practices, promotes plant-based education for children, recognizes leaders in American gardening, and disseminates the art and science of horticulture. AHS members include home gardeners, professional horticulturists, educators, and Master Gardeners.

As part of its mission, the AHS provides useful and accurate gardening information through multiple avenues, including its magazine The American Gardener, website, garden book-publishing program, gardening workshops, online seminars, and special publications such as the AHS Plant-Heat Zone Map. In 2004, the AHS launched the Green Garage® program, which offers gardeners tips and techniques for environmentally responsible gardening practices.

The AHS headquarters at River Farm in Alexandria, Virginia, is a national observatory for horticulture. The 25-acre site along the Potomac River features formal gardens, meadows, demonstration sites, and children's gardens.
