3. In the NTIA Report, NTIA found that energy, water and railroad services are primary components of the nation's critical infrastructure and that the continued use of spectrum is essential to the current and future operations of these industries. The NTIA Report submits that without adequate radio spectrum, providers of energy, water and railroad services would be unable to address major service interruptions due to natural disaster, equipment malfunctions or in some cases, terrorist activities. According to NTIA, these industries believe that additional spectrum is needed—specifically for exclusive use—because of existing congestion problems. Commenters stated that commercial wireless services do not adequately service these industries' needs due to issues of compatibility, reliability, and cost-effectiveness. The NTIA Report also finds a lack of consensus among the commenters as to where new spectrum can be reallocated or obtained. NTIA received limited response on the issue of whether these industries use spectrum-efficient technology. NTIA concludes that it is unable to validate the specific spectrum requirements of the energy, water and railroad industries. It suggests, however, that the industries' needs may be addressed by use of advanced communications technology or newly allocated frequency bands.
