
From: 李平 [kaijialiping@21cn.com]
Sent: Saturday, December 31, 2005 2:43 AM
To: FSIS RegulationsComments
Subject: Chinese poultry meat products

docket number 05-012P

As an ordinary staff member of a Chinese poultry establishment, I don't think it is necessary for American citizens to worry too much about the impact of the importation of Chinese poultry products into the United States, or for American farmers to worry about the possible damages to their interests. The imports of Chinese processed poultry products are expected to total less than 2,500,000 pounds per year. Dear American citizens, you know what does 2,500,000 pounds per year mean? It means the sales per MONTH for an ordinary Chinese poultry establishment. Currently the major market for Chinese poultry products is Japan, which consumes poultry products from 35 Chinese poultry establishments. The portion that is going to the US market is very small.

Besides, FSIS's proposal is based on relevant American rules and regulations. Please have the confidence that FSIS is working to serve the interest of American citizens. America and China will have reciprocal benefits; to put it simply, some American citizens may not know that American and Chinese poultry products are highly complementary due to different consuming habits. The Americans' favorite is chicken breast while the Chinese enjoy eating chicken legs. In fact, China imports a large quantity of chicken legs from the US.

li ping

