

In 2004, manufacturing was the lone industry that had more cases with only job transfer or restriction than cases with days away from work.

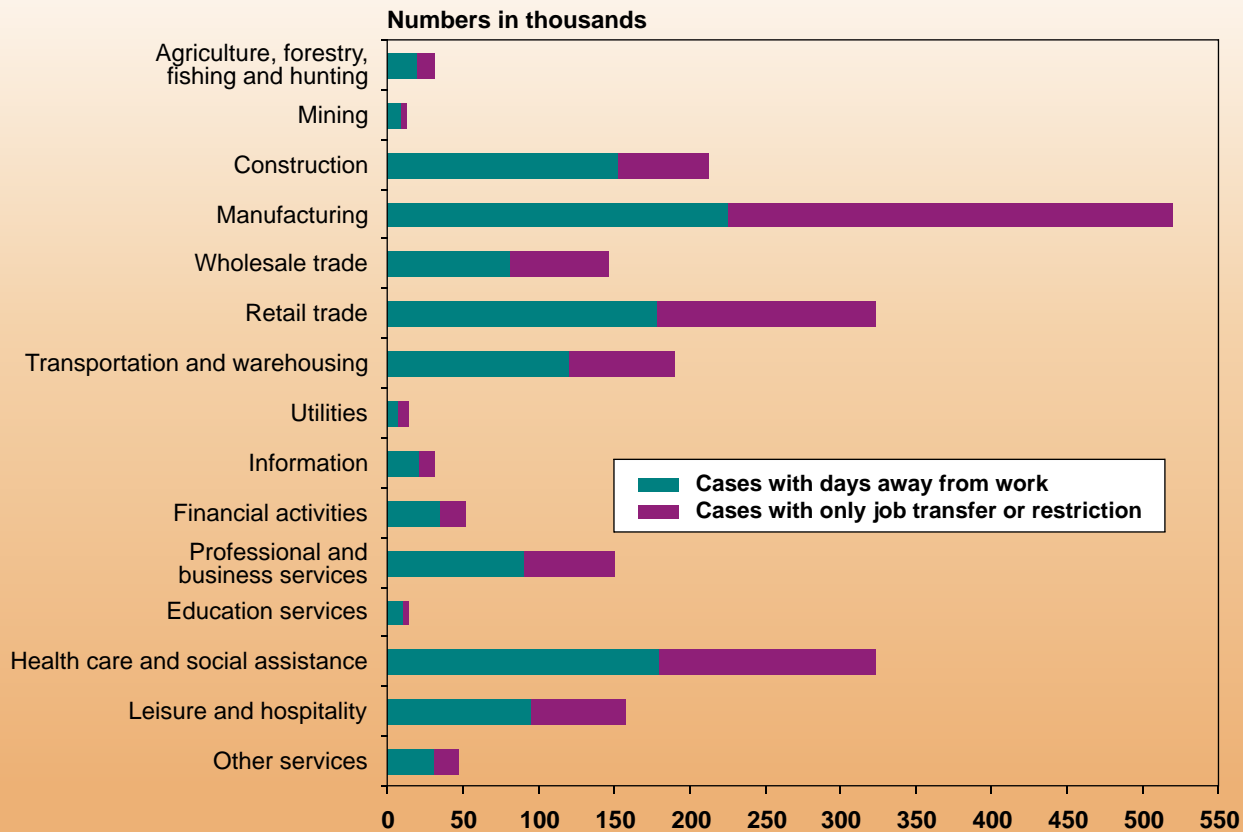

Almost all industries recorded more cases with days away from work than cases with only job transfer or restriction.

Approximately 2.2 million injuries and illnesses were serious enough to require recuperation away from work, transfer to another job, restricted duties at work, or a combination of these actions.

Manufacturing recorded the highest numbers both for cases with days away from work and for cases with only job transfer or restriction.

Number of cases with days away from work, job transfer, or restriction, by case type and selected industry sector, 2004

Source: U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor, November 2005