Federally funded employment and training programs serve an important role in the nation's economy by helping job seekers enhance their job skills, identify job opportunities and ultimately find employment. While the Department of Labor is responsible for overseeing many of these programs, other agencies such as the Departments of Health and Human Services (HHS) and Housing and Urban Development (HUD) also play a role. In the 1990s, we issued a series of reports that highlighted the range of programs that provided employment and training services. Again in 2000, just after the implementation of the Workforce Investment Act (WIA), which provided for a consolidated service delivery system for many of the programs, we reviewed the workforce development system, identifying 40 federally funded employment and training programs--operated through seven federal agencies--for which a key program goal was providing employment and training assistance.^a As WIA approaches reauthorization, it is important to re-examine the system's structure to determine if additional changes are indicated.

To understand the current structure, you asked us to provide you with an update of the employment and training programs we reported on in 2000. Specifically, you asked us to determine (1) how many federal employment and training programs there were in fiscal year 2002, their appropriations in fiscal years 2001, 2002, and 2003, and the proportion of funds used to provide employment and training services; (2) how many individuals were served by the programs and the target populations and services associated with each program; and (3) the kinds of outcome measures used by the programs.

To address these questions, we distributed a questionnaire to officials in nine federal agencies, collecting information about funding levels, type and number of participants, services provided and outcome measures tracked. Applying the same definition used in the earlier study, we defined employment and training programs as those specifically designed to (1) help job seekers find employment (2) enhance specific job skills of individuals in order to increase their employability, and (3) identify job opportunities. Our analysis included all programs reported in the earlier study if they were still funded in fiscal year 2002, as well as additional programs identified by agency officials and confirmed by questionnaire responses. We compared the results to those we obtained in the earlier study. We also consulted the 2002 Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance to corroborate responses obtained in the questionnaire and to verify that employment and training activities were a major focus of the programs. We conducted our work from November 2002 to March 2003 in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards.

On March 21, 2003, we briefed your staff on the results of our analyses. This report formally conveys the information provided during that briefing. Appendix I contains the briefing slides.

In summary, we identified 44 programs administered by 9 federal agencies that provided a range of employment and training services. While many of the programs were the same as those included in the 2000 report, 10 programs were newly identified and 6 previously identified programs had been discontinued. Collectively, appropriations for employment and training programs remained relatively constant between fiscal years 1999 and 2002, totaling about $30 billion in both 2001 and 2002, with roughly $12 billion used for employment and training activities. While six programs accounted for 73 percent of the $12 billion total, a majority of programs reported using 75 percent or more of their appropriations for employment and training activities.

The programs served a total of more than 30 million individuals, with about three-fourths of the programs focusing their services primarily on one target population. Some of the programs were small, serving about 100 participants, while other programs were quite large, serving just over 19 million participants. Seventy-seven percent of the programs identified one primary target population as the intended service recipients, with Native Americans, veterans, and youth ranking among the most frequently cited target populations. Thirteen programs required participants to be economically disadvantaged in fiscal year 2002, compared with 15 programs in 1999. Although fewer total programs required participants to be economically disadvantaged in 2002, 5 of the 15 programs with that requirement in 1999 were discontinued by 2002, including 2 Welfare-to-Work Grant programs and 3 Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) programs. Further, 3 of the 13 programs that currently require participants to be economically disadvantaged did not have that requirement in 1999. Employment counseling and job search/job placement activities were among the most commonly provided services.

All but one of the 44 programs we identified reported that they are tracking at least one outcome measure in 2003. The most frequently cited outcome measure was “entered employment”—the number of program participants finding jobs. This measure is being tracked by 39 of the 44 programs in 2003.

We provided a draft of this report to officials at each of the 9 agencies for their technical review and incorporated their comments where appropriate.

We are sending copies of this report to relevant congressional committees and other interested parties and will make copies available to others upon request. In addition, the report will be available at no charge on GAO’s Web site at <http://www.gao.gov>.

Update of Employment and Training Programs

Briefing for Staff of the Committee on Education and the Workforce and
Subcommittee on 21st Century Competitiveness,
House of Representatives

March 21, 2003

Key Questions

1. How many federal employment and training programs were there in fiscal year 2002? What was their appropriation in fiscal years 2001 and 2002, and what proportion was used for employment and training services?
 2. How many individuals did the programs serve? What were the target populations and services associated with each program?
 3. How many of these programs track outcome measures? What kinds of measures are they using?

Scope and Methodology

- Questionnaire distributed to officials in nine federal agencies between 12/9/2002 and 1/28/2003. Data are self-reported.
 - Defined employment and training programs as those specifically designed to
 - help job seekers find employment
 - enhance specific job skills of individuals in order to increase their employability and/or
 - identify job opportunities.
 - The programs in the current review include:
 - Programs from the 2000 report (GAO-01-71)
 - Included if they were still being funded in fiscal year 2002.
 - Recent additions
 - Identified by agency officials.

Summary of Findings

- We identified 44 federal programs that provided a range of employment and training services. These programs represent a combined appropriation of about $30 billion in fiscal year 2002. Most of the programs reported using 75 percent or more of their appropriations for employment and training activities.
- The programs reported serving more than 30 million participants, with about three-fourths focusing their services on one primary target population. More programs reported providing employment counseling and job search/job placement activities than any other services.
- All but 1 program reported that they are tracking at least one outcome measure in fiscal year 2003, most often “entered employment.”

Programs and Funding

Overall 2002 Funding Levels for Programs Providing Employment and Training Are Comparable to 1999

- The 44 programs in the current review had a combined appropriation of:
 - $30.637 billion in 2002
 - $30.045 billion in 2001
- The 40 programs we reviewed in 2000 had a combined appropriation of:
 - $29.251 billion in 2000
 - $30.920 billion in 1999
- 34 programs were included in both reviews and had combined appropriations of:
 - $26.499 billion in 2002
 - $26.099 billion in 1999

(See appendix III for the appropriations of each program in the current review.)

Programs and Funding

Appropriations Have Increased for About Half of Programs That Provide Employment and Training

- Net change:
 - Total appropriations increased 2.0 percent between FY 2001 and FY 2002.
- Program-by-program changes:
 - Twenty-four programs (or 55 percent) reported an increase in total appropriations between 2001 and 2002,
 - 11 programs increased 5 percent or more, and
 - 13 programs increased 1 to 5 percent.
 - Fifteen programs reported no change.
 - Four programs reported a decrease.
 - Between 1999 and 2002, appropriations increased for 24 of the 34 programs that spanned both reviews.

Programs and Funding

Employment and Training Was a Major Focus for Most Programs

- Forty of the 44 programs could estimate the amount spent on employment and training services in 2001; 39 programs could provide estimates for 2002.^a
 - Thirty-five programs spent at least 75 percent of their funds on employment and training activities in both years.
 - In 2001, 26 programs spent 100 percent.
 - In 2002, 25 programs spent 100 percent.
 - Two programs spent 30 percent or less of their 2002 appropriations for employment and training activities.
 - Refugee Assistance—Voluntary Agency Programs
 - Migrant Education—High School Equivalency Program

^aTwo of the programs that were unable to estimate the amount obligated for employment and training in this review had appropriations exceeding $1 billion. Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) reported appropriations of $17 billion for FY 2002, and Vocational Education—Basic Grants to States reported appropriations of $1.2 billion for FY 2002.

Programs and Funding

Six Programs Accounted for Most of the Employment and Training Spending in Both Fiscal Years 1999 and 2001

- In 2001, six programs accounted for 73 percent of the $12.657 billion used for employment and training services.
- In 1999, six programs accounted for 64 percent of the $11.720 billion used for employment and training services.
- Of the six programs identified in 2001,
 - three were the same as in 1999—State Vocational Rehabilitation Services, Job Corps, and Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) grants, and
 - three were new Workforce Investment Act (WIA) programs that replaced Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) programs.

Participants and Services

Number of Participants Served Varied Greatly

- Forty-two of the 44 programs in the current review could provide a count of the number of participants served.
 - Overall, more than 30 million participants were served.
 - The number of participants ranged from 113 to just over 19 million.
 - A majority of programs (57% or 24 of the 42) served between 5,000 and 500,000 participants.
- In 1999, 39 of the 40 programs could provide a count of participants served.
 - The number of participants ranged from 318 to 12,000,000.
 - Slightly less than half of programs (46% or 18 of the 39) served between 5,000 and 500,000 participants.

(See appendix IV for a list of the number of participants served by each program.)

Participants and Services

Most of the Programs Identified a Primary Target Population

- Most of the programs targeted participants from certain populations.
 - In 2002, 34 of the 44 programs (or 77 percent) reported focusing services largely on one primary target population.
 - In 1999, 33 of the 40 programs (or 83 percent) reported focusing services largely on one primary target population.

(See appendix VII for a complete list of the population groups served by each program.)

Participants and Services

Some Programs Focused on Economically Disadvantaged in 2002

- Thirteen programs required participants to be economically disadvantaged in fiscal year 2002.
 - Three of these programs did not require participants to be disadvantaged in 1999.
 - Nine programs required participants to be economically disadvantaged both in 1999 and in 2002.
 - One program was newly identified in the 2002 review.
- In fiscal year 1999, 15 programs required participants to be economically disadvantaged.
 - Five of those programs have been discontinued or replaced.

(See appendix V for a list of programs requiring beneficiaries to be disadvantaged in 1999 and 2002.)

Outcome Measures

Nearly All Programs Track Outcome Measures

- Nearly all of the 44 programs we surveyed reported tracking at least one employment-related outcome measure (40 in FY 2002; 43 in FY 2003).
 - Four programs reported that they did not track any outcome measures in 2002.
 - One program, the Food Stamp Employment and Training Program, will not be tracking outcomes in 2003.
 - Two programs allowed individual grantees to define their own outcome measures, making it difficult to track outcomes at the national level.

(See appendix VI for more information on programs monitoring outcome measures.)

Outcome Measures

Source: FY 2002 figures provided by agency officials; FY 1999 figures obtained from GAO-01-71.

^aFY 2002 unless otherwise noted.

^bThis number includes only individuals participating in postsecondary vocational and technical educational institutions.

^cThis number includes the 37,008 individuals participating in the State Supported Employment Services Program.

^dProgram officials were unable to provide an estimate of the number of individuals who received employment and training services.

^eThis estimate includes both the Community Economic Development Program and the Rural Facilities Program, whereas the FY 1999 estimate did not.

^fThis figure may undercount participants, as it represents only those participants who have actually obtained employment.

^gTribes participating in P.L. 102-477 using Employment Assistance funds are not included in this figure.

^hThis estimate represents a period prior to FY 2001.

ⁱMost programs reported participants served for FY 2002, with the exception of certain Labor programs that collect data by program year rather than fiscal year. Other exceptions are noted.

^jThis estimate represents participants served in FY 2001.

^kThis estimate was derived by adding the number of participants in "separate" Tribal Work Grants programs and an estimate of the number served with Tribal Work Grants funds in P.L. 102-477 projects.

^aWhile this program does not explicitly require beneficiaries to be economically disadvantaged in order to be eligible for services, beneficiaries must be engaged in migrant and other seasonal farm work. According to agency officials, this population is predominantly low-income.

Appendix VI: Outcome Measures

While some employment and training programs have been monitoring outcomes over a period of time, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) has recently issued a proposal that would require many federally funded employment and training programs to track four common outcome measures each for youth or adult programs in fiscal year 2004. Table 1 outlines OMB's proposed measures.

Table 1: OMB's Common Measures for Employment and Training Programs

Youth programs	Adult programs
<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Placement in employment, education, or the military• Attainment of a degree or certificate• Literacy and numeracy gains• Efficiency (annual appropriation per participant)	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Entered employment• Retention in employment• Earnings Increase• Efficiency

Source: Information provided by agency officials.

Federal agencies provided information on selected outcomes that they currently track for each of their programs. Table 2 lists information on which programs are currently tracking performance measures similar to those proposed by OMB. Our questionnaire did not collect information on an efficiency measure.

Table 2 also identifies the programs that were reviewed using the Program Assessment Rating Tool (PART) during the fiscal year 2004 budget cycle. PART is a new evaluation instrument that links a program's performance to its budget. The administration plans to review approximately one-fifth of all federal programs every year, to ensure that every program will have been evaluated using PART by the time of the 2008 budget submission.

H-1B Technical Skills Training Grant Program	H-1B Technical Skills Training Grants are financed by a user fee paid by employers to bring foreign workers into the United States on a temporary basis to work in high skill or specialty occupations. As part of the H-1B non-immigrant visa program, DOL's Technical Skills Training Grant program was established under the American Competitiveness and Workforce Improvement Act of 1998 as amended by the American Competitiveness in the Twentieth Century Act of 2002 and companion legislation. The grants are a long-term solution to domestic skill shortages in high skill and high technology occupation—raising the technical skill levels of American workers so they can take advantage of the new technology-related, high skills employment opportunities. This will, in turn, help businesses reduce their dependence on skilled foreign professionals permitted to work in the United States on a temporary basis under the H-1B visa program. H-1B technical skills grants are focused on directly addressing the high skill technology shortages of American businesses; they are not intended to address the labor shortages due to reasons other than technical skill shortages.	Technical skills training grants are geared towards employed and unemployed workers who can be trained and placed directly in highly skilled H-1B occupations or in the highest echelons of an H-1B career ladder. Candidates for training funded by the H-1B Technical Skills Training Grants should possess (and be identified through appropriate assessment tools) a high level of general educational background and, in addition, have the prerequisites for the occupational training being proposed. Targeted individuals should also possess certain characteristics such as drive and initiative that will help guarantee successful completion of the high skill level training funded by H-1B grants. Employees at the H-1B skill level are generally characterized as having a Bachelor's degree or comparable work experience.

Serious and Violent Offender Initiative (Justice)	The Serious and Violent Offender Reentry Initiative responds to the release and reentry of thousands of adult and juvenile, serious, high-risk offenders into communities across the country. This initiative is part of a collaborative effort of multiple federal partners consisting of the U.S. Departments of Justice, Labor, Health and Human Services, Housing and Urban Development, Education, and Veterans Affairs. The initiative will provide funding and/or resources to develop, implement, enhance, and evaluate reentry strategies that will ensure the safety of the community and reduce serious violent crime and recidivism. The federal partners will assist state and local agencies in identifying, accessing, and leveraging existing federal, state, and local resources in their efforts to create a prototypical reentry system that addresses both juvenile and adult offender populations in all three phases of reentry: institutional readiness; community reentry; and stabilization. This system should be designed for replication in other jurisdictions throughout the states. This goal would be accomplished by providing structure and authority that guide the return of these offenders to the community and that ensure their access to an array of existing institutional and community resources, pursuant to detailed plans created from a thorough assessment of their individual needs.	The target population includes serious and violent/high-risk offenders (juvenile and/or adult) who have been incarcerated in post-adjudicatory institutions, such as prisons and training schools, and are considered to be at high risk of recidivism. Offenders who have been determined likely to commit serious and/or violent felony crime upon their release should be targeted.
