

Comment #: 5

March 22 2004

Mr. Armando Chienne
Seisint
Florida
United States

It is of utmost importance to now allow companies to fool the FTC by taking advantage of loopholes so that a company does not have to comply with Consumer Reporting Agency regulations. In particular, Seisint has a division called SDS that was created to allow them to bypass Consumer Reporting Agency regulations. The company also hired someone from the FTC to help guide them in what needed to be done so that the SDS business does not impact their Accurant business. You may also know of Seisint as the company that handles the technology for the Matrix project. Seisint does not have any of the consumer practices that provide for correction of incorrect information as due companies such as Choicepoint. Companies such as Seisint that aggregate and data mine our personal information should be scrutinized and not allowed to use loopholes to bypass FTC regulations.