

About Sacramento

California's Fifth Congressional District, nestled between the Sierra Nevada Mountains and the Pacific Ocean, is centered in metropolitan Sacramento, the heart of northern California. The city is both the capital of the Golden State and one of the fastest-growing areas in the nation. The 2006 Census American Community Survey ranked it as the forty-first largest city in the United States, with a population of 658,493 in the city proper and roughly 1.2 million in the greater Sacramento area. Sacramento combines the comforts of a small town with the amenities of a thriving cosmopolitan city. Crime rates, air pollution, and commute times are all generally lower than those of other major California cities. With its dynamic and high-growth business sector, a new easy-to-use public transportation system, and a rich diversity of cultural, educational, and entertainment attractions, it is easy to see why Sacramento is an ideal place to live and do business.

History

At the turn of the 19th century, Sacramento was settled by predominantly the Miwok, Maidu, and Shonommey Indian tribes. In the early 1800s, Spanish explorer Gabriel Moraga arrived on the lush banks of the city's major river and proclaimed the area "Sacramento", the Spanish word for Holy Sacrament. However, the most pivotal event in Sacramento's history began in nearby Coloma, when pioneer John Sutter and his business partner, James Marshall, discovered gold on their property in 1848. This event forever changed the face of Sacramento and transformed it from a tranquil wilderness outpost into the center stage for prospector dreams and ambitions. As a result of the Gold Rush, Sacramento enjoyed a period of great economic prosperity as the commercial epicenter of the west coast. This economic boom was partly triggered by the building of the western hub of the first continental railroad in Sacramento and the city's close proximity to major rivers. In 1849, Sacramento became California's first charter city.

Government

Sacramento became the state's capital city in 1854, four years after California was admitted into the Union. Since then it has served continuously as the center of government for what is now the world's fifth-largest economy. The State Capitol, made of granite and patterned after the national Capitol in Washington, DC, was completed in 1874. Today, Sacramento is the workplace of Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger as well as the state's 80 Assembly Members and 40 Senators. In addition, many of the state's agencies and departments are headquartered in Sacramento, making the state government the largest employer in the region. The local government incorporates both a city and county government comprised of locally-elected officials.

Things to See and Do

In addition to being enjoyed by local residents, the city of Sacramento has become a popular tourist destination in recent years. The stately California Capitol, historic Old Sacramento, the Crocker Art Museum, and the California State Railroad Museum are all enjoyable attractions. Sacramento also hosts numerous entertainment events each year, including the Memorial Day weekend Dixieland Jazz Jubilee and the California State Fair in August. Every month the city showcases its rich diversity with celebrations of the area's wide-ranging cultural heritage, such as the Highland Scottish Games and the Pacific Rim Street Festival.

Sacramento is also the premier historic destination in California. The Golden State Museum, the California State Archives, the Victorian-style former Governor's Mansion, McClellan Aviation Museum, and the well-known Sutter's Fort are just a sampling of the exciting learning destinations in the area.

Two professional basketball teams, the Sacramento Kings and the Sacramento Monarchs, call the River City their home. The Kings and Monarchs both enjoy tremendous community support as they consistently play to sold-out crowds at the Arco Arena. During the summer, Sacramento residents pack the beautiful Raley Field to watch the River Cats, the city's Triple-A baseball affiliate of the Oakland Athletics.

Beyond these main attractions, Sacramentans often turn to the city's many renowned museums, theater, opera, and ballet productions. However, perhaps one of Sacramento's greatest adventures is the 32-mile long, 7,000-acre American River Parkway. It is the first, and one of the few, riverside habitat preservations within a major urban center. The parkway was designated a natural preserve in 1960, and includes 20 recreation areas offering numerous opportunities for fishing, rafting, kayaking, hiking, and nature study.

Sacramento Area Links

City of Sacramento

Sacramento County

Sacramento County Regional Parks, Recreation, and Open Space

California State Railroad Museum

Sacramento Zoo

Sacramento Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce

North Sacramento Chamber of Commerce

Sacramento Opera

Sacramento Ballet

Sacramento Jazz Jubilee

Sacramento Kings Basketball

Sacramento Monarchs Basketball

Sacramento Rivercats Baseball

California State Government

Governor

Assembly

Senate