

John L. Rustin

John Rustin is the Director of Government Relations for the North Carolina Family Policy Council, a nonprofit, nonpartisan, statewide research and education organization based in Raleigh, N.C.

As Director of Government Relations, John is a registered lobbyist who spends a majority of his time during the legislative session at the North Carolina General Assembly, monitoring legislation, working to educate legislators and the public on the impact of legislation on families across the state, and testifying before legislative committees on issues of interest to the family.

John writes the Family Policy Facts, a weekly publication of the Family Policy Council, which is distributed across the state.

When the legislature is not in session, John monitors legislative study committees and commissions and various regulatory agencies; conducts research on family-related issues; and speaks to churches and civic organizations regarding traditional family values, legislative issues and other matters.

Prior to joining the North Carolina Family Policy Council, John was employed by the law firm of Hunton & Williams and represented several corporate entities before the North Carolina General Assembly.

John received a BA in Industrial Relations from UNC-Chapel Hill and lives in Raleigh with his wife Laynette, daughter Amelia, and son Jordan.