

Multiple columns are common in trees. A minor wound may set up a central column of discolored wood and later large branches die and heal slowly. The decay associated with the branch stubs does not penetrate the inner column of compartmentalized discolored wood.

