The University of Delaware and Seaford School District's high schools are collaborating on "Delmarva Education Action Learning: Focus Seaford," a distance learning project that will stream video of educational content, and provide hands-on computer and information technology experience, to over 1700 students. The project will also provided professional development training to teachers. Beyond the immediate benefits, the project will help reduce costs for the school district by reducing the need to fund travel time and expenses for teachers.
