OLCC launches new blog to get feedback and provide more information to Oregonians

Portland, Ore. – With the public's increasing reliability on the internet to get information, the Oregon Liquor Control Commission is launching their official blog. The OLCC aims to connect with the public by providing information on a wide variety of topics and offering Oregonians a chance to share thoughts. A link to the new blog can be found on the OLCC homepage <http://www.oregon.gov/OLCC>

Current posts are, "Self-serve alcohol not allowed under Oregon statute," and "Myth: Oregon offers only a limited variety of distilled spirits products." Full articles can be found at <http://olccblog.blogspot.com/> Future topics will include:

- Myth: Distilled spirits are more expensive in Oregon
- Do I need a liquor license to serve alcohol at my wedding, retirement, open house, etc.?
- Does the OLCC require that all alcohol be sold in brown paper bags?
