AGENT FOR THE INTELLIGENCER.

Major JAMES VAUGHN, of Sweet-Water, Tenn., and R. H. CALDWELL, of Philadelphia, Penn., are authorized Agents for this paper.

R. W. MOON, Esq., of LaGrange, Trion county, Ga., has kindly consented to act as Agent for the "ATLANTA DAILY AND WEEKLY INTELLIGENCER" at that point. His receipts for advertising and subscription will be duly recognized at this office.

Col. H. B. WILKINSON, of Newman, Coweta County, Ga., has reluctantly consented to act as Agent for the "ATLANTA DAILY AND WEEKLY INTELLIGENCER," and is empowered so to do. Those of our friends in that County and its vicinity, who desire to subscribe for, or advertise in, this paper, will please call upon Col. WILKINSON.

THE BATTLE OF MURFREESBORO.

3d Georgia Battalion.

Mr. Editor:
Occupying a position in the army not strictly military, it is not unfair to presume that I can, to some extent, approximate a correct account of the actions and doings, in the battle of Murfreesboro, of those with whom I have the honor of being associated.

As far as I have seen the Georgia papers, sufficient notice has not been taken of the 3d Georgia Battalion. Composed of select men and accomplished officers, and entering the army almost at the commencement of the war, this command has seen service in North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, and Kentucky, and endured hardships, suffered privations, and braved dangers, with as little murmuring and as great heroism as any other.

At four o'clock on the morning of the 2d of December, after the muttering thunders of artillery in the distance had, for several days, announced the approaching conflict, the Confederate forces near Readyville were put in motion, and, although it was pitchy dark, and the rain descended in torrents, reached Murfreesboro, a distance of twelve miles, by ten o'clock the same morning, ready and eager to mingle in the dangers, and share the honors of the impending struggle. Our line of battle, already engaged, extended from the Lebanon pike on the right, across the Nashville pike, in the centre, to the Triune road, on the left, a distance of from five to six miles, the field being selected about two miles beyond Murfreesboro. Along this line our infantry were stationed, the division of Gen. Breckinridge on the extreme right, and that of Gen. McCown on the left. From day to day our gallant cavalry, under its heroic leaders, Gens. Wharton and Wheeler, slowly retired before the advancing columns of the enemy, dealing heavy blows at every step, and gradually enticing them forward until within point blank range of our infantry, who, in the mean time, were anxiously but quietly awaiting their approach.

At length, on the 30th, heavy skirmishing and continual cannoneading in the morning furnished conclusive evidence that the fearful struggle had actually commenced. In the afternoon the firing gradually extended along down our lines, passing the centre, and terminating at the left. During the entire evening the contest grew warmer continually.

The rattle of musketry, the sharp cracking of the rifle, and the heavy booming thunders of the artillery, literally became incessant. Often the shouts of our men would rend the air with tones of terror as they gallantly repulsed a charge from the enemy, or in turn charged themselves. About sunset the scene heightened to one of the most frightful sublimity. The enemy having set carefully our entire line, concentrated a heavy force, supported by many pieces of artillery, against the Division commanded by General Cheatham near our centre. Here the demon of war turned loose his anger, and vented his rage in all his fury. Here Robertson's pierced through the heart, fell a magnificent spectacle of self-sacrificing heroism. By some means soon after this sad loss the brigade became separated, Col. Stovall, commanding the 3d and 9th Georgia battalions, the latter commanded by the gallant and chivalrous Major Smith, and Col. Vance the remainder of the brigade. With his reduced command numbering not more than four hundred men, Col. Stovall, resolutely encountered a whole brigade of the enemy sheltered behind trees and rocks in a cedar forest, and after sustaining a loss of forty men, killed and wounded, finally dislodged the enemy from their strong position and gallantly pressed forward in pursuit. Through the entire day he maintained his position keeping his column unbroken and unscattered and at all times by his presence, calmness, courage, and perfect ease in manouevring his men, animating them to deeds of daring glory. In his support his Adjutant Lt. B. M. Turner, did his whole duty, cheering forward the men by an example of patient courage and fearless daring, recklessly exposing himself to the greatest danger. At one time—a critical moment—when our men were falling around him, he dashed gallantly forward waving his hat and telling his men to follow him. His horse was shot from under him, but he and Col. Stovall both fortunately escaped unharmed.

It would consume too much space to report the deeds of gallantry and daring performed by the officers and privates of the different companies. Be it sufficient to say what I know in general terms. Each officer was at his post, and each did his duty. During the several days through which the battle was protracted, the field and company officers all set a most noble example of patient forbearance in the midst of privation and hardship, and self-forgetting courage when engaged in the fearful struggle of death. Of the soldiers of the 3d Georgia Battalion too much cannot be said in praise. Kept constantly on the field day and night for about one week, without shelter, with a limited supply of blankets, with short rations, in the rain and on the frozen ground a part of the time, without fire, they incurred not, but patiently awaited the issue and then taught the ignominious such lessons as brave freedom alone can teach.

As to the results of the battle as a whole, the Government and the country must judge for themselves. With an army of scarcely forty thousand men, Gen. Bragg received undimmed the shock of, and hurled back the Federal forces, seventy thousand strong, with a reserve estimated at from twenty-five to forty thousand, under command of Gen. Rosecrans. In the contest long and bitter as it was, the achievements of our arms and the exploits of our chieftains place this struggle side by side with the great battles of the war. The classic ground around Murfreesboro will not be forgotten so long as the soldier has a friend, or freedom a home.

But it is painful to think of our fallen comrades, whom we love and whose loss we mourn. Among these, fell W. J. Pryor, 1st Lieutenant Company G, pierced in the right breast by a minnie ball, penetrating through the upper lobe of the lung, and inflicting a wound from which he died on the 3d of January. His gentlemanly deportment as an officer, his daring as a soldier, and his unfaltering courage in battle, will not be forgotten by his associates, his company, or the battalion, while the classic fields of Murfreesboro live in memory. All our fallen braves deserve a monument to their memory, and the lasting gratitude of all lovers of freedom.

Expressly for the Intelligencer.

Capture of Yankee Transports on the Cumberland River.

CHATTANOOGA, Jan. 18.—Official information received here, says that Gen. Wheeler has captured four transports, freighted with valuable stores for Rosenerau, at Hopper's Shoals, on the Cumberland River.

A gunboat, pursuing our cavalry was also captured by Wheeler.

Fair hundred prisoners were paroled, and all the transports destroyed except one, which was bonded and sent off with the prisoners.

Yankee Thieves Captured.

SAVANNAH, Jan. 17.—Eight Yankee prisoners have been captured near St. Augustine, by Capt. Dixon's guerrillas, and arrived this evening at Oglethorpe Barracks, Savannah, under charge of Capt. S. W. May. Among the prisoners are the Provost Marshal, sutler, and three merchants. The party were mounted on borrowed horses, on a visit to a sugar bottom in the vicinity of that ancient city. The horses are valuable. The prisoners are to be sent to Gen. Beauregard.

Death of Gen. Jones.

RICHMOND, Jan. 11.—Maj. General D. R. Jones died here yesterday.

From Fredericksburg.

FREDERICKSBURG, Jan. 18.—The demonstration of the enemy indicate that early attempts will be made to cross the river above and below town. It is believed the attack may be expected at any time.

Northern dates to the 10th has been received. News unimportant.

The Yankees still claim a victory at Springfield.

Gen. Grant is constantly expected at Memphis with his army.

The 109th Illinois Regiment has disbanded. The Lieut. Colonel has gone over to the Confederates.

The steamer Marsillson, from White River, was captured by the Guerrillas and burnt. The officers and crew were paraded. The peace proposition of the New Jersey Legislature were introduced by a former member of McClellan's staff.

Reports of Stanton's probable resignation are again current at Washington.

Confederate Officers Captured to be Closely Confined.

CHATTANOOGA, Jan. 17.—Rosenerau has sent the Confederate officers captured at Murfreesboro' to Alton, Ill., to be closely confined because of the recent proclamation of President Davis denying parole to Federal officers.

Gen. Mitchell, Commandant of the Post at Nashville, orders that all property of rebel sympathizers found within one mile of where a bridge or car is burned by guerrillas, shall be destroyed.
