MORE....

It is the goal of the National Archives to make the documents and records in our holdings free and available to everyone. We have a number of records useful to genealogists including census records, naturalization records, passenger arrival records, Canadian border entry records, customs records, draft military service records, pension and bounty land application files, Chinese Exclusion Act case files, select African American records, select Native American records, and select vital records. In addition to free access to our holdings, patrons may use our public access computers to search online subscription services, also free of charge. The National Archives-Northeast Region also hosts free genealogy workshops on an ongoing basis.

The headquarters for the National Archives-Northeast Region is located at 380 Trapelo Road in Waltham, MA. The New York office is located at 201 Varick Street, 12th floor, New York, NY.

The mission of the National Archives is to ensure, for the Citizen and the Public Servant, for the President and the Congress and the Courts, ready access to essential evidence.
