

Hello

Since these people enjoy sending the porn emails as frequently as they do, why not require them to send a "consent email" first, one that does not contain porn, but specifically requires the recipient to acknowledge consent. The porn spammer would be required to keep the recipient's email on file.

As is common knowledge, some, but not all, spammers state that "you opted in with one of our affiliates" (which is bogus) and "click here to opt out."
Yeah, right.

I realize the spammers will cry foul and say that is putting undue burden on them. Well, then, maybe they need to get out of the business. Have them crawl back into the sewers they came out of. (My apologies to the rats and lizards and other vermin that legitimately populate the sewers.)

Thank you.

Patrick Wade
