

Your Free Guide to Reliable Health Information

healthfinder® is the award-winning Federal health Web site. It features special information for men and women, parents, kids, seniors, racial and ethnic groups, and Spanish speakers.

healthfinder® helps people stay healthy, understand diagnoses, explore treatment options, find support, and generally become more informed about health and medical topics.

The healthfinder® Web site is coordinated by the Office of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Looking on the Web for health information you can trust?

These questions can help you decide if a site is trustworthy.

Does the Web site —

- 😊 clearly state its purpose and sponsors?
- 😊 separate advertising and sales from health information?
- 😊 get its information from reliable sources?
- 😊 keep information up-to-date?
- 😊 tell you how it chooses to link to other Web sites?
- 😊 offer a way to contact the people who run the site?
- 😊 tell you the information it collects about you and how it will be protected?
- 😞 make outrageous claims?
- 😞 offer prescriptions or medical advice without licensed healthcare providers?
