Abstract: In October 2003, the Federal Reserve published for comment in the Federal Register a proposed rulemaking (Docket No. OP-1164) that would amend its cash services policy by adding two elements: (1) a custodial inventory program and (2) a recirculation fee. Before undertaking a permanent custodial inventory program, the Board authorized Reserve Banks to implement a one-year proof-of-concept program in 2004, including an application to participate and an Internet-based inventory tracking system. The Federal Reserve will evaluate the results of the program after six months of operation and will decide whether to implement a permanent custodial inventory program in 2005.

If the Board approves implementation of a permanent program then a final rulemaking will be published announcing the permanent program.¹ In the interim, the Federal Reserve must meet its requirement under the Paperwork Reduction Act to implement the information collection associated with the application and Internet-based inventory tracking system. No comments were received on the information collection part of the rule.
