SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Background

The National Longitudinal Survey (NLS) of Women has been conducted since the late 1960's. Historically, the NLS of Women was collected as two surveys, the Survey of Work Experience for Mature Women and the Survey of Work Experience for Young Women. In 1995 the Census Bureau combined the mature and young women's cohort into one panel.

The data collected by the NLS of Women will contribute to the knowledge about labor market processes involved in the work to retirement transition, and opportunities and services for women who desire to enter or reenter the labor force. Survey data will contribute to the knowledge about women's ability to succeed in the job market and how their levels of success relate to educational attainment, vocational training, prior occupational experiences, general and job-specific experiences, and retirement decisions.

The NLS research contributes to the formation of national policy in the areas of education, training and employment programs, unemployment compensation, and social security benefits. In addition, members of the academic community publish articles and reports based on these NLS data for the Department of Labor (DOL) and other funding agencies. The DOL uses the changes measured in the labor market to design programs that would ease employment and unemployment problems. The survey design provides data gathered over time to form the only data set that contains this information. Without the collection of these data, an accurate longitudinal data set could not be provided to researchers and policy-makers, and the DOL could not perform its policy- and report-making activities, as described above.

II. Current Actions

The 1997 NLS of Women will document work experience, labor force attachment, participation in educational or training programs, financial situations, health status and health benefits. The survey will identify any significant trends in the woman's work experience as a whole. It will continue to obtain detailed information on the work history and pension coverage of the respondent's husband. In addition, it will obtain information on respondents who give (or receive) time or money to (or from) parents as well.

Type of Review: Reinstatement, with change, of a previously approved collection for which approval has expired.
