

Employment of MINORS

A guide for 14 through 17-year-olds, their parents and employers

Newspaper carriers/vendors and minors performing domestic work or work in private residences are not subject to the provisions of the child labor laws. However, the provisions of other laws, including minimum wage, overtime, working conditions and wage collection laws, still apply to most of these employees. Contact BOLI for more information.

Going To Work For The First Time

Child labor laws protect young people in the work force. Although minors are no longer required to have permits, they, their parents and employers should be aware of laws and regulations applying to young people, ages 14-17 and the kinds of jobs and working hours that are allowed.

EMPLOYERS WHO HIRE MINORS MUST:

- Comply with all child labor laws.
- Verify the age of each minor hired from an appropriate proof of age document such as passport, driver's license or birth certificate.
- Maintain a list of all minors hired.
- Post a validated Employment Certificate in a conspicuous location where all employees may readily see it. To obtain an Employment Certificate, an employer must file an annual Employment Certificate Application with the Bureau of Labor and Industries' Wage and Hour Division. Applications are available at all bureau offices or employers can call the Child Labor Unit in Portland, (971) 673-0836, and have an application sent to them. You can also print an application form from our web site: www.oregon.gov/boli.
  - ◆ Employers fill out the application and send it to the bureau's Child Labor Unit, 800 NE Oregon St. #1045, Portland, Oregon 97232.
  - ◆ When the application is approved, the bureau sends a validated annual Employment Certificate to the employer.
  - ◆ If the employer changes the work duties of minors at any time, the employer must fill out a Notice of Change Form and send it to the bureau for approval.
  - ◆ The bureau sends employers renewal notices approximately six weeks prior to the expiration of an annual certificate.
