I think common sense dictates that the Government should charter a study (led by business executives and career government officials (not political appointees) to conduct a business case study first if competitive outsourcing will really improve operations and produce reduced cost structure in any government agency.

I think as a taxpayer, it's better to spend funds upfront for a feasibility study. I'd rather pay $1.00 upfront than pay $2.00 later and find out that the whole outsourcing business will not work and totally bad for the taxpayers.
