

Oilseeds: World Markets and Trade

A Rapid Rise in Russia's Soybean Imports Rooted in Growing Meal and Oil Demand

The year-long surge in commodity prices has contributed to sustained economic growth in Russia. Growing incomes have allowed consumers to upgrade their diets leading to an increase in poultry demand and consequently, domestic production. With poultry production forecast to grow 10 percent in 2008, demand for feed, especially soybean meal, is expected to rise.

Growing consumer incomes are also contributing to a rise in vegetable oil demand. With the shortfall in sunflowerseed production in 2007, demand for alternative oils, like soybean oil, is especially strong.

These two factors are already pushing soybean imports higher for the year. Imports are expected to approach 300,000 tons, an eight-fold rise from the previous year. Exporters have shipped nearly 200,000 tons of soybeans to Russia through March. And with Brazil, the largest supplier of soybeans to Russia, approaching its primary shipping season, additional purchases are expected.
