Dear Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs Hunt:

My husband will have his 72nd birthday tomorrow; I turned 65 in November. While neither of us brings in salary from our former professions, we are both active volunteers in our community. We teach English as a Second Language, tutor 3rd graders in math, serve as community mediators, and volunteer in two service organizations. We returned yesterday from a week in Boston with our grandchildren, assisting their parents and trying to be a loving presence in young lives.

Are our lives now worth 2/3 of their "worth" when we were working for money? Or is this EPA "pricetag" an excuse for industries to pollute and profit from their pollution?

Sincerely,

Beverly England Williams
