IN THIS ISSUE

ENVIRONMENTAL ADVOCACY

In this edition of MarkeTips, the General Services Administration (GSA) salutes individuals from our past and present who have made significant contributions to protecting and educating others about our greatest natural resource, our environment.

At GSA's Federal Supply Service (FSS), we place an emphasis on providing our customers with environmentally friendly solutions that meet their mission requirements. We accomplish this by making available products that minimize waste, conserve natural resources, and reduce/prevent pollution.

To help our customers find these products, we highlight them in our catalogs and have included a number of special icons in our on-line systems, GSA Global Supply and GSA Advantage.® We also have a separate publication, entitled, "Environmental Products and Services Guide" (EPSG), which is a major source of information about the thousands of products we offer that have recycled content, conserve energy and/or water, or contain reduced pollutants. The EPSG also provides information about the many environmental services we offer. Information on the availability of the 2003-2004 edition can be found on page 12.

To further assist our customers with their environmental solutions, GSA provides an all-encompassing environmental web site (www.gsa.gov/enviro). This site contains not only environmental product and service information, but also applicable laws, Executive orders, and other relevant regulations, as well as links to other agency sites and various environmental organizations.

At GSA, we strive to provide the Federal community with quality products and services that enable environmental compliance and encourage everyone to do their part in protecting the environment.
