About EAC	4

Background

In 1979, the Federal Election Commission (FEC) published a series of reports under The National Clearinghouse on Election Administration (NCEA) to assist election officials in their efforts to provide election services to groups identified by Section 203 of the Voting Rights Act (VRA) as language minorities. The purpose of the reports was to provide guidance to state and local election officials for (1) identifying their language minority populations, (2) providing bilingual registration services, and (3) providing bilingual balloting services. The three-volume series consisted of: A Handbook of Ideas for Local Election Officials, A Glossary of Common Spanish Election Terminology, and A State of the Art Report. The ideas and recommendations contained in these reports were not designed as legal guidelines for complying with the provisions of the VRA nor were election officials required to consider or adopt them.

In 2002, the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) established the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) to serve as a national clearinghouse and resource for the compilation of information and review of procedures with respect to the administration of Federal elections. Section 241 of HAVA allows the EAC to carry out studies and other activities with the goal of promoting effective administration of Federal elections. These methods are to be the most convenient, accessible, and easy to use for voters, including voters with limited proficiency in the English language. Section 241(b)(5) and (14) directly refer to conducting studies to address issues faced by voters with limited proficiency in the English language. To meet these requirements, in August 2005 the EAC convened its first Language Working Group to provide guidance to the Commission on research to address barriers faced by language minorities to the election process. This initial meeting focused on Spanish-speaking voters. The meeting included discussions on the readability and usability of the National Mail-In Voter Registration Form and updating the FEC's A Glossary of Common Spanish Election Terminology. The group was comprised of local election officials, Congressional staff members, national advocacy groups, and research and public policy organizations. Using this meeting as a model, the EAC met with representatives of the Asian and Pacific Islander American communities to address similar matters in May 2006. The EAC is looking forward to working with other language groups in the near future. Therefore, it is with great pleasure that the EAC presents its 2007 Glossary of Key Election Terminology [English/Spanish and Spanish/English]. The main purpose of this glossary remains the same as the FEC's 1979 version – to assist state and local election officials in providing translated election materials that are culturally and linguistically appropriate. These are neither complete definitions and translations nor exclusive rules of usage. However, the establishment of uniform election terminology may prove beneficial for ensuring access to the electoral system regardless of a voter's country of origin or place of residence in the United States. The EAC also expects this glossary to serve as a model for developing similar efforts in other languages covered under the VRA.

Process

The glossary now includes a total of 1,843 terms and phrases used in the administration of elections in the United States. The new words and phrases included in the glossary were compiled from a review of the informational materials made available on each state's election website. This included, but was not limited to: voter guides/pamphlets; registration forms; voting systems and their components; Election Day forms and materials; sample ballots; and state/local election glossaries. In addition, the terms found in the 2005 Voluntary Voting System Guidelines' (VVSG) glossary were also incorporated, along with their definitions, as they appear in the VVSG. As terms and phrases were considered for inclusion in the glossary, they were reviewed for their degree of usage, specificity to elections, and similarity to other phrases.

To ensure the translations were culturally and linguistically appropriate, terms were translated and reviewed by a multi-dialect team of translators representing four of the main regions of origin of the Hispanic population living in the United States – Mexico, Puerto Rico, Cuba, and Central America. Translations were carefully reviewed by the team and EAC staff to make sure they were appropriate in the context of elections. At times, more than one translation was considered to be appropriate and widely accepted. In such cases, all of the possible translations were included in the glossary and are left to the user to decide which translation suits his or her needs and target population. However, the translation most commonly accepted and appropriate in the context of elections is listed first. State and local election officials are encouraged to work cooperatively with each other and with members of the target population to develop and review translated election materials that are suitable for their State and local communities.

How to use this glossary

For each noun the gender is indicated in italics at the end of the Spanish translation (only available in the English to Spanish section). Relationships between the terms were established during the translation process and cross-references were included in the glossary for a substantial number of the terms to assist the user in identifying similar terms and phrases. Furthermore, there were glossary entries which were identified as requiring an example of the term or phrase used in context, and these appear at the end of the translation.

Pronunciation Guide for Spanish words

Of all the foreign languages, Spanish is one of the easiest languages for a non-Spanish speaker to pronounce.

It sounds the way it is read. However there are a few exceptions to keep in mind:

LETTER	GUIDE
J	Always pronounced like the English H but more emphatic (Spanish example: jurado)
ñ	This Spanish character is pronounced NY as in canyon (Spanish example: español)
G	Before A, O or U it is pronounced as the G in get Before E or I it is pronounced like the English H but more emphatic. (Spanish example: general)
I	Always pronounced ee, as in feet, wheel, bee. (Spanish example si)
U	Always pronounced oo, as in fool, pool. (Spanish example: uno)
LL	Always pronounced as the Y in yes. (Spanish example: casilla)
RR	Always trilled with the tip of your tongue against the roof of your mouth behind your teeth. Sounds similar to how the “r” is pronounced in some regions of Scotland, or the strong emphasis of the “r” in the Italian word arrivederci. (Spanish example: a rr oz)
Y	Pronounced as the English Y except when it stands alone (y is Spanish for and) then it is pronounced ee as in tree (Spanish example: cinco y media [five thirty])

Comments

The EAC welcomes and encourages comments on this glossary and its contents; they will greatly assist in improving the glossary's quality and usefulness. Revisions to terms and translations will be conducted on an as-needed basis and will be made available on the EAC website at www.eac.gov. For more information about this project or to request a copy of the 2007 Glossary of Key Election Terminology [English/Spanish and Spanish/English], please, contact the EAC toll-free at 1-866-747-1471 or via e-mail at HAVAinfo@eac.gov.

About the EAC

The EAC is an independent, bipartisan agency created by the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA). It was established to assist in the administration of Federal elections and provide assistance with the administration of certain Federal election laws and programs. The EAC provides assistance by dispersing, administering, and auditing Federal funds for States to implement HAVA requirements, conducting studies and other activities to promote the effective administration of Federal elections, and serving as a national clearinghouse and resource of information regarding election administration. In addition, HAVA requires the EAC to adopt the Voluntary Voting System Guidelines and to establish a program for the testing, certification, decertification, and recertification of voting system hardware and software.
