

Chambers 6.9: The Chambers Lofts in Kansas City, Mo., includes 50 units of affordable housing. The skyway seen at the left of the photographs existed prior to the current rehabilitation.

Chambers 6.10: The Chambers Lofts is a mixed-use property, featuring retail spaces in addition to housing units.

Chambers 6.11: The sparse interiors of the apartment units are consistent with the existing condition of the building prior to the rehabilitation. Historically used as office space, the interiors had been modified over time by numerous tenants.

Chambers 6.12: One of the few historic interior features remaining in the building, the historic steel stair was repaired and retained. Windows openings adjacent to the stair, located on a secondary elevation, were enclosed in order to allow the stair to be used as a fire exit.

Bostwick 6.13: Featured in the 1990 movie “I Love You to Death,” the Bostwick Building is Tacoma’s local “flatiron” landmark.

Bostwick 6.14: The apartment units feature large repaired historic windows, as well as historic trim and wood floors.

Bostwick 6.15: As seen in this photograph of a corridor, previous owners removed much of the building's decorative woodwork. Fortunately, the material was stored on-site and was reinstalled during the rehabilitation.

Bostwick 6.16: The corridors of the Bostwick Building were rehabilitated to their historic appearance.
