

The Criminal Investigation Division (CID) of EPA's Office of Criminal Enforcement, Forensics, and Training investigates and refers for prosecution the most significant and egregious violators of environmental laws that pose a threat to human health and the environment.

CID plays a vital role in EPA's enforcement strategy, combating intentional violations of the law with powerful enforcement tools — criminal prosecution, the threat of imprisonment, and the whole range of judicial sanctions.

EPA's Criminal Investigation Division

The Criminal Investigation Division (CID) investigates violations of environmental laws in order to protect human health and the environment. We investigate violations of statutes administered by EPA affecting air, water, and land resources where those statutes provide criminal sanctions (to include the possibility of imprisonment) for negligent, knowing, or willful environmental crimes. We work with our partners in Federal, tribal, state, local, and international law enforcement in pursuing cases against violators.

CID Special Agents are sworn federal law enforcement officers with statutory authority to conduct investigations, carry firearms, make arrests for any federal crime and execute and serve any warrant.

We provide state-of-the-art training to our employees and our law enforcement partners in environmental enforcement techniques.
