

Indiana Harbor Canal, 1969

A man in a green jacket and red life vest stands on a boat, holding a long pole, looking at a large, turbulent, orange-brown waterfall or dam structure in the background. The water is churning and foaming, creating a massive wall of white and yellow foam. The scene is captured from a low angle on the boat, looking towards the structure.
