Design for the Environment Garment and Textile Care Program

The Cleaner Guide A List of Professional Cleaners Offering Professional Wetcleaning or Liquid Carbon Dioxide Cleaning Processes

Since 1992, in response to growing health and environmental concerns about perchloroethylene (perc), the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has been working in a voluntary partnership with the drycleaning industry to reduce exposures to perc. EPA's Design for the Environment Garment and Textile Care Program encourages professional clothes cleaners to explore environmentally-preferable technologies capable of cleaning garments labeled "dryclean only."

This list was compiled in 2001 in response to numerous requests for the location of cleaners offering environmentally-preferable cleaning services. While this is still a useful resource, no doubt more cleaners have started offering these services to their customers since the list was completed. The Professional Wetcleaners Network maintains a current list on their web site (<http://www.professionalwetcleaners.com/wetcleaners.html>). The liquid carbon dioxide cleaning equipment manufacturers supply updated information through their web sites (<http://www.co2olclean.com/> and <http://www.washpoint.com/>).

Cleaners as of July 2001 are listed below, alphabetically by state, for each of the two processes.

DISCLAIMER: This guide has been reviewed by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and approved for publication. It is based on experiences gained from projects conducted by EPA's Design for the Environment (DfE) Program in collaboration with partners from industry, public interest groups, and research/educational institutions. The information contained in this document does not constitute EPA policy. Further, mention of trade names or commercial products does not imply endorsement or recommendation for use.
