

Looking Forward

The Methane to Markets Partnership expects continued growth, and the U.S. commitment to the Partnership remains strong. In the coming years, the United States plans to sponsor a range of activities in all four Partnership sectors, building on the multi-year initiatives that are underway.

In addition, the United States plans to play a leadership role in moving the Partnership forward and advancing the key outcomes of the Methane to Markets Partnership Expo, the premier international forum for promoting methane recovery and use project opportunities and technologies. In particular, the United States will be working with government and private sector partners to bring to fruition the more than 50 project opportunities featured at the Expo in Beijing, China.

The United States is also looking forward to working with all of the Methane to Markets Partners over the coming year to review progress and to discuss the potential for new methane reduction goals and time-frames. The United States is committed to continuing this critical work and ensuring the success of the collective efforts to recover and utilize methane emissions while delivering near-term, economic, environmental, and energy benefits.
