South Carolina barbecue is pork that is slow cooked and hand pulled or shredded. It usually is flavored with a tangy sauce. There are four major types of sauce. It often is served on festive occasions such as holiday celebrations, reunions, weddings, tailgating parties, fundraisers, and political meetings. Many barbecue restaurants are open only on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. Cooking methods, cuts of pork, sauce type, and side dishes served vary widely across the state. Barbecue encourages friendly debate because South Carolinians often have a strong preference for a particular type that reflects the cultural character and identity of a specific region or place.

An incremental plan to transition to a predominantly electronic federal depository

To create a partnership between GPO and Clemson to "…facilitate the migration of tangible documents distribution to electronic dissemination for Federal depository libraries while assessing the operational and service implications of a regional Federal depository library with a primarily electronic collection."
