WASHINGTON, D.C. 20548

HUMAN RESOURCES
DIVISION

February 21, 1986

B-221660

The Honorable Daniel K. Inouye
United States Senate

Dear Senator Inouye:

In response to your June 15, 1984, letter and subsequent discussions with your office, we obtained information on state laws and regulations governing independently practicing clinical social workers (those not employed by physicians, clinics, or hospitals). This fact sheet provides the results of our efforts to determine, for each state

- whether the state had established any control of social workers through licensing, registration, or certification practices;
- whether the state recognized for insurance reimbursement purposes persons in the independent practice of clinical social work as alternative providers of mental health services and, if it did, whether referral and/or supervision by a medical doctor was required; and
- whether the state recognized independently practicing persons providing clinical social work as alternative providers of mental health services for Medicaid reimbursement purposes.

Our information was obtained primarily from questionnaires sent to the state agencies responsible for health insurance regulations and Medicaid and licensing activities. We also obtained information from the National Association of Social Workers, Inc., and the National Federation of Societies for Clinical Social Work, Inc.

We found that 19 states restrict the independent practice of clinical social work to persons holding a license. Another 12 states have established licensure activity covering social workers, but anyone may practice clinical social work without a license as long as he or she does not use the license title in dealing with the public. Twelve states also have established criteria for independently practicing clinical social workers as alternative providers of mental health services for health insurance purposes, but no state has recognized them as such for Medicaid reimbursement.

As arranged with your office, we are sending copies of this fact sheet to the state agencies responsible for health insurance, medicaid, and licensing, and to the national organizations cited above and their state organizations.

Should you need additional information on the contents of this document, please call me on 275-5451.

Sincerely yours,

FACT SHEET ON CLINICAL SOCIAL WORK:

STATE LAWS GOVERNING

INDEPENDENT PRACTICE

AND REIMBURSEMENT OF SERVICES

In response to a June 15, 1984, request from Senator Daniel K. Inouye and subsequent discussions with his office, we obtained information on state legislation applicable to persons performing clinical social work as independent practitioners rather than as employees of a physician or a mental health or medical facility. The information covers three areas:

- licensing, registration, or certification practices applicable to social workers;
- recognition of persons in the independent practice of clinical social work as alternative providers of mental health services for insurance purposes; and
- recognition by state medicaid programs of independently practicing persons providing clinical social work as alternative providers of mental health services.

OBJECTIVES, SCOPE, AND METHODOLOGY

Our inquiry focused on social workers who provide clinical social work services as independent practitioners. We did not request information on social workers who perform clinical social work as employees of physicians, clinics, or hospitals.

We obtained our information primarily through the use of three sets of questionnaires we sent out between December 1984 and April 1985 to state agencies responsible for health insurance, Medicaid, and licensing activities. Also, we contacted the National Association of Social Workers, Inc. (NASW), and the National Federation of Societies for Clinical Social Work, Inc. (NFCSW), for information.

Material provided by these organizations generally identified states that had established a program for licensing¹ ¹May include registration, certification, or licensure. Because we found no clear distinction among the three terms as used by the states, we use "license" in this fact sheet to encompass all three.

social workers and states that recognized clinical social workers as alternative providers of mental health services for insurance purposes. For states that NASW did not identify as licensing social workers, we contacted state representatives by telephone or used other sources to verify that the information was still valid.

We then sent questionnaires to the 32 states we had identified as having licensing programs. Only Ohio failed to return information on licensing although we made follow-up telephone requests. We also sent questionnaires on insurance and Medicaid provisions to all states and the District of Columbia. For states that did not return those questionnaires, we obtained the information through telephone follow-up.

"CLINICAL SOCIAL WORK" DEFINED

Not all states use the term "clinical" in the title of the licenses they issue for social work, and even when used in the license title, the definition of clinical social work varies. Therefore in our questionnaire, we requested information on licenses using the word "clinical" in the title or, where clinical was not used, on licenses applicable to the services performed by our definition of clinical social work. Our questionnaire defined clinical social work as the assessment, diagnosis, consultation, treatment, and prevention of psychosocial dysfunction, disability, or impairment, including emotional and mental disorders.

This definition was adapted, in consultation with state regulatory officials, from the definitions of clinical social work used by NASW and NFCSW (see app. I). The legislative definitions used by the 31 licensing states to refer to clinical social workers or persons performing clinical social services are given in appendix II. The appendix also contains the definitions for social work and social worker used by states that do not distinguish between the different types of social work.

SUMMARY OF INFORMATION OBTAINED ON CLINICAL SOCIAL WORK

Thirty-two states provide some control over clinical social work in their jurisdiction through registration, certification, or licensure of social workers. (Because Ohio did not respond to our licensing questionnaire, the licensing data in this fact sheet concerns the remaining 31 states.) The significant distinction among the states is whether the licensing is

--practice restrictive, i.e., restricts the practice of social work and the use of certain titles to a person holding a valid license issued by the state (19 states) or

--title restrictive, i.e., restricts only the use of certain titles to persons holding a valid license issued by the state, but does not restrict the practice of social work (12 states).

These states are listed according to type of restriction in table 1. Many states have established several licenses for social workers, each license having its own eligibility requirements.

The recognition of independent practitioners for health insurance purposes is another important subject that we examined. Twelve states (listed in table 1) have mandated that persons performing clinical social work in independent practice who meet the established criteria for clinical social workers must be accepted as alternative providers of mental health services under policies providing mental health coverage.

(Although we received no response from the Ohio licensing agency, Ohio's health insurance laws do not recognize independently practicing clinical social workers as alternative providers of mental health services, according to the Assistant Director of Ohio's Insurance Department.)

Of the 12 states mandating recognition for insurance purposes, all provide for licensing of social workers but only 9 restrict the practice of social work to those holding a license. In 3 of the 12 states, the insurance laws require the licensing activity to identify those clinical social workers in independent practice who meet the health insurance qualification for direct reimbursement by health insurance companies.

The provisions of each state's laws or regulations authorizing the licensing of clinical social workers and insurance reimbursement to persons performing clinical social work services appear in appendixes III, IV, and V.

The following 18 states and the District of Columbia have neither established licensing control over the activities of persons performing social work nor recognized persons independently practicing clinical social work as alternative providers of mental health services for insurance purposes:

(More details of our findings on state licensing of social workers and state recognition of independent practitioners for insurance and Medicaid purposes are presented below.)

STATE LICENSING OF SOCIAL WORKERS

Of the 31 states that license social workers and responded to our questionnaire, we found that some states had established one license for all social workers, while others had established several levels of licensure. If the latter, for each level, the state generally established requirements concerning education, accreditation of the educational body, and extent of experience necessary to qualify for the license. In addition, most states required that a written examination be taken to obtain the license.

Practice-restrictive states

For the 19 states that restrict the practice of social work to persons with a license, another distinction is whether the word "clinical" is used in the license title, and if it is not, what restricts the level of licensee who can independently practice clinical social work (see table 2). Nine states use the word "clinical" in either a basic license or the title of a specialty license. In these states, the public is thus informed that a licensee has met the state criteria to practice clinical social work. In nine other states, the private, independent practice of clinical social work is restricted to certain license holders although the title of the license does not include the word "clinical." Finally, one state, West Virginia, which has three levels of licensure, restricts practice to license holders but places no restriction on the level or type of social work that any license holder may engage in.

The legislative language on licensing and insurance provisions for the 19 practice-restrictive states appears in appendixes III ("clinical" used in title) and IV ("clinical" not used in title).

Title-restrictive states

In the 12 states that issue licenses restricting the use of social work titles (but not the practice of social work) to persons holding valid licenses, anyone may practice clinical social work as long as he or she does not use a title restricted to license holders in dealing with the public. As shown in table 3, 5 of the 12 states have at least one license whose title includes the term "clinical." In the other seven states, "clinical" is not used in the title of any license issued. Because any individual, licensed or nonlicensed, may practice clinical social work in these seven states, we have not listed the titles of the licenses issued.

State licensing requirements

Each state that licenses social workers has established requirements that an applicant must meet to be eligible for the state's license. The requirements generally cover education, experience, and completion of an examination. Not all states apply all three requirements and there is some variance in the standard established if a requirement applies. NASW and NFCSW have established or been instrumental in the establishment of two national registers, the Register of Clinical Social Workers and the National Registry of Health Care Providers in Clinical Social Work, respectively. The registers list clinical social workers and establish requirements that applicants must meet (see app. I for requirements).

The following information on state education, experience, and examination requirements applies to the 23 states that either issue a social worker license with the term "clinical" in the title or restrict independent practice to holders of specific licenses (18 practice-restrictive and 5 title-restrictive states). We omit information on West Virginia, which is also practice restrictive, as it does not restrict clinical social work practice to a specific type of license and its three licenses have different requirements. Nor do we include information for the seven title restrictive states that neither restrict the practice of independent social work nor issue a license with the word "clinical" in the title and that consequently specify no minimum qualifications for clinical social work practice. (See apps. III, IV, and V for states' specific legislative language.)

Education

All 23 states require at least a master's degree for persons seeking a license associated with clinical social work. Of the 23 states, 20 require that the education be obtained from a school accredited by the Council on Social Work Education. For three states, legislation does not specify accreditation but leaves the determination up to the licensing board.

Experience

Of the 23 states, 22 require the applicant to have some postgraduate experience to be eligible for the license. Delaware, a state that restricts practice to certain license holders, has not established experience as an eligibility requirement. Of the 22 states that do require experience, 18 require at least 2 years of experience and 4 (Florida, Virginia, North Dakota, and Alabama) require 3 years. (These are the requirements for full-time experience. Many states also have established an acceptable level for part-time experience.)

In the 22 states that require postgraduate experience, 19 have established qualifications for the persons who supervise that experience. The qualifications established in the 19 states by either legislation or regulation include persons holding the top social worker license issued by the state. In three states (North Carolina, Texas, and Idaho), neither legislation nor board regulations are specific as to the qualification of the person providing the postgraduate supervision but leave the decision up to the licensing board.

Examination

Twenty of the 23 states required applicants to pass a written examination to be licensed; three states (Oregon, Texas, and Idaho) did not. As of January 1, 1986, however, Texas requires applicants to pass a written examination.

RECOGNITION BY STATE FOR INSURANCE PURPOSES

Our questionnaire on insurance asked each state insurance agency if the state's insurance laws recognized independent practitioners of clinical social work as alternative providers of mental health services. In response, 12 states indicated that their insurance laws recognized clinical social workers as alternative providers of mental health services (see table 1). In addition, several other states responded that mental health services could be provided by clinical social workers as employees of physicians or as members of clinics administered by psychiatrists or psychologists. In such situations, bills for the clinical social workers' services are submitted by the doctor or the clinic.

The actual language of state insurance laws recognizing clinical social workers as alternative providers of mental health services (see apps. III to V) varies from a direct statement that the policies must give the policyholder the right to choose a clinical social worker if the policy includes mental health coverage, to language requiring the insurer to offer the policyholder the option of coverage that would permit the use of clinical social workers. One state, New Hampshire, permits an additional premium for the option to use clinical social workers. The sections of the insurance laws submitted to us by the other states allowing the policyholder to select the optional coverage contain no reference to whether or not an additional premium would be allowed.

Responses from the 12 states that recognize clinical social workers as alternative providers indicate that none require the clinical social worker to work under the supervision of a medical professional to be accepted by an insurer for service to an insuree. Eleven states responded to our question on how insurance billing by a clinical social worker was to be handled. In five states, legislation mandates that the clinical social worker may bill directly (as opposed to billing through a medical doctor). In another five states, legislation does not cover billing, and in one state (New Hampshire), legislation permits direct billing by clinical social workers if the policyholder has chosen the optional coverage.

RECOGNITION BY MEDICAID
AS ALTERNATIVE PROVIDER

We sent a questionnaire to the agencies responsible for operating the Medicaid programs in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. Information received via the questionnaire and our follow-up telephone inquiries indicated that no Medicaid program recognized an independently practicing clinical social worker as an alternative provider of mental health services. Several responses indicated that clinical social worker services would be reimbursed if performed by an employee of a physician or a qualified mental health clinic.

NATIONAL SOCIAL WORK ASSOCIATIONS:
QUALIFICATIONS AND DEFINITIONS

Presented below are the definitions of clinical social work used by the two major national associations and their qualifications relating to education, experience, and examination required of individuals applying to be registered by them.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF SOCIAL WORKERS, INC.

(The following definition was adopted by the NASW Board of Directors in January 1984.)

"Clinical Social Work (CSW) shares with all social work practice the goal of enhancement and maintenance of psychosocial functioning of individuals, families, and small groups. CSW practice is the professional application of social work theory and methods to the treatment and prevention of psychosocial dysfunction, disability, or impairment, including emotional and mental disorders. It is based on knowledge of one or more theories of human development within a psychosocial context.

"The perspective of person-in-situation is central to CSW practice. CSW includes interventions directed to interpersonal interactions, intrapsychic dynamics, life support and management issues. CSW services consist of assessment, diagnosis, treatment including psychotherapy and counseling, client-centered advocacy, consultation and evaluation. The process of CSW is undertaken within the objectives of social work and the principles and values contained in the NASW Code of Ethics."

Minimum requirements to be listed in NASW's register of Clinical Social Workers are as follows:

--Education--master's degree in social work.

--School--accredited or recognized by Council on Social Work Education (CSWE).

--Experience--2 years of full-time post-master's clinical social work practice supervised by a master's level social worker, or a total of 3,000 hours accumulated over a period of not less than 24 months.

--Examination--satisfactory completion of written examination required to join the Academy of Certified Social Workers, active members of which are eligible to be listed on the NASW registry of clinical social workers.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF SOCIETIES
FOR CLINICAL SOCIAL WORK, INC.

(The following definition was approved by NFCSW in May 1984.)

"Clinical Social Work Practice includes provision of mental health services for the diagnosis, treatment, and prevention of mental and emotional disorders in individuals, families, and groups. Clinical Social Work Practice is based on knowledge and theory of psychosocial development, behavior, psychopathology, unconscious motivation, interpersonal relationships, and environmental stress. Treatment interventions include, but are not limited to, individual, marital, family and group psychotherapy."

Minimum requirements to be listed in the NFCSW-supported National Registry of Health Care Providers in Clinical Social Work are as follows:

--Education--master's degree in social work with a core of clinical course work or demonstrated equivalent.

--School--accredited by CSWE.

--Experience--graduate field work placement of 600 hours per year or its equivalent, providing direct clinical services to individuals, families, or groups. A minimum 2 years or equivalent 3,000 hours of clinical social work experience under supervision of a graduate clinical social worker.

--License--current licensure or registration for those residing in states where social worker registration, certification, or licensure is mandated.

--Examination--none.

SOCIAL WORK DEFINITIONS USED BY STATES THAT LICENSE SOCIAL WORKERS

This appendix contains definitions used by the 31 states that license social workers and that responded to our questionnaire.

ALABAMA

"Social work. The professional activity of helping individuals, groups or communities enhance or restore their capacity for social functioning and of preventing or controlling social problems altering societal conditions as a means towards enabling people to attain their maximum potential.

Social work practice. The professional application of social work values, principles, and techniques to one or more of the following ends: helping people obtain tangible services, counseling with individuals, families and groups, helping communities or groups provide or improve social and health services, engaging in research related to those ends and principles, and administering organizations and agencies engaging in such practice. The practice of social work requires knowledge of human development and behavior, of social, economic and cultural institutions and of the inter-action of all these factors.

Social work method. An orderly, systematic mode of practice and procedure recognized and approved by the board of social work examiners. This includes but is not limited to social casework, social group work and community organization."

Ala. Code §34-30-1(2),(3),(5), (Supp. 1984)

ARKANSAS

"'Practice of social work' shall mean a professional service which effects change in social conditions, human behavior, and emotional responses of individuals, couples, families, groups, and organizations. 'Social work practice' can only be performed with specialized knowledge and skills related to human development, the potential for human growth, the availability of social resources, and the knowledge of social systems. The disciplined application of social work knowledge and skills includes but is not restricted to the following:

(1) Counseling with individuals, couples, families, and groups for purposes of assessment and enhancement of the problem solving and coping capacities of people.

(2) The application of social work knowledge and skills in planning, administration, and research."

Ark. Stat. Ann. §71-2803(b) (Supp. 1983)

CALIFORNIA

"The practice of clinical social work is defined as a service in which a special knowledge of social resources, human capabilities, and the part that unconscious motivation plays in determining behavior, is directed at helping people to achieve more adequate, satisfying and productive social adjustments. The application of social work principles and methods includes, but is not restricted to, counseling and using applied psychotherapy [sic] of a non-medical nature with individuals, families and groups, providing information and referral services, providing or arranging for the provision of social services, explaining and interpreting the psychosocial aspects in the situations of individuals, families or groups, helping communities to organize, to provide, or improve social and health services, and doing research related to social work.

Psychotherapy, within the meaning of this chapter, is the use of psychosocial methods within a professional relationship, to assist the person or persons to achieve a better psychosocial adaptation, to acquire greater human realization of psychosocial potential and adaptation, to modify internal and external conditions which affect individuals, groups, or communities in respect to behavior, emotions, and thinking, in respect to their intrapersonal and interpersonal processes."

MAINE

"A 'clinical social worker' is a person . . . whose practice includes the application of recognized principles, methods and procedures of the profession of social work to the treatment and prevention of psycho-social disorders, including the diagnosis of mental illness and emotional disorders for the purpose of treatment and therapeutic intervention, but excluding the diagnosis of organic mental illness or treatment of any illness by organic therapy."

"'Psycho-social evaluation' as used in this chapter includes the determination and examination by social workers of the psycho-social situation of an individual or group related to inter and intra-personal stress, family background, family interaction, living arrangements and socio-economic problems and treatment, evaluation, plans and goals, including the diagnosis of mental illness and emotional disorders for the purpose of treatment and therapeutic intervention, but excluding the diagnosis of organic mental illness or treatment of any illness by organic therapy, to the extent permitted by the licensure provision, of this chapter. The diagnosis of mental illness and emotional disorders shall be limited to licensed clinical social workers and certified social workers. In the process of making a diagnosis and formulating a treatment plan for mental illness or emotional disorder, the social worker shall assure that the person is examined by a physician, and may take into account the physician's opinion in forming the psycho-social evaluation. When a person has been seen by a physician within 3 months

. . . a telephone consultation between that physician and the social worker may be held in lieu of the examination required by this subsection. The medical visit or the telephone consultation shall be documented in the clinical records of the person."
