A Trusted Source of Housing Research

Credible. Comprehensive. Accessible. Affordable. These terms describe the housing research and information that HUD USER has been delivering to researchers, state and local government officials, builders, city planners, architects and engineers, housing and community development practitioners, educators, and nonprofits for more than 25 years. Managed by HUD's Office of Policy Development and Research, HUD USER provides housing professionals with access to more than 850 HUD-sponsored research publications and data sets – all at little or no cost.

Every day, housing professionals from across the nation and around the world visit www.HUDUSER.org for reliable information on housing. And while the depth of resources we have to offer is considerable, finding what you need has never been easier. Our enhanced search capabilities allow you to conduct advanced searches to find exactly what you need. Should you require additional assistance, our knowledgeable information specialists are available Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 5:15 p.m. (Eastern time) at 1-800-245-2691. Once you find what you're after, you can download the publications free of charge or order printed copies online, anytime, for a nominal cost – usually just $5 each.

On the web or by phone, HUD USER opens the door to comprehensive, practical information on the latest issues, such as housing market trends, economic and demographic data, housing finance, geographic information systems, affordable housing strategies, policy analysis, and energy- and resource-efficient design and construction. In addition to current research, HUD USER also serves as an historical database – delivering more than a quarter century’s worth of practical, issue-driven housing research and policy analysis to your doorstep... and your desktop.

From Broad Overviews to Detailed Analyses

Created by housing professionals for housing professionals, HUD USER is designed to meet the changing needs of the people we serve. We recognize that some visitors to www.HUDUSER.org may be looking for concise, plain-language summaries of our research publications, while others demand greater depth and detail. Still others seek out our unique data sets – raw information that can be used to conduct new research and to identify location-specific market activity. Some data sets currently available include HUD median family income limits, qualified Census tracts, low-income housing tax credits, fair market rents, and portions of the American Housing Survey.

HUD USER also offers a calendar of upcoming events, links to other resources, and news about ongoing research. To keep you informed, we offer free subscriptions to:

- HUD USER News, a weekly listserv that surveys the latest housing resources produced by HUD’s Office of Policy Development and Research. Recognizing that most of our subscribers are busy professionals, we summarize new research findings, activities, and events in a concise email message that delivers the key points in a straightforward, uncluttered manner. If you want to know more, we provide a link to the publication that can be downloaded free of charge or ordered for a nominal cost.
- ResearchWorks, a traditional-format newsletter with a contemporary outlook, offers a more in-depth look at the latest HUD research and how it’s being applied in the field. Developed to serve as a bridge linking housing research and practice, ResearchWorks provides coverage of new reports and ongoing HUD initiatives, and looks at the many ways our research is being applied in the field. Published 10 times a year, ResearchWorks includes new publication announcements, relevant case studies, and success stories highlighting the efforts of those who work to make housing more affordable,

Regulatory Landscaping: Affordable Strategies

Affordable? Workforce? Mixed income? Whatever you choose to call efforts to narrow the housing-income gap, HUD's Regulatory Barriers Clearinghouse (RBC) collects and disseminates successful state and local regulatory reform strategies that are in place, right now, in communities throughout the country, allowing you to craft a regulatory landscape that supports development of reasonably priced housing. An easy-to-use, searchable database, RBC contains more than 3,500 state and local laws, regulations, and policies that support the development, maintenance, availability, and affordability of America's housing stock.

In addition to ordinances and statutes, RBC delivers strategies, publications, and practices that can help you reduce and remove regulatory barriers. Each record is summarized in a few short sentences. If you want to learn more, a detailed explanation is just a click away. From there, we provide links to the actual ordinance, court decision, news article, procedure, or strategy.
