

May I suggest that if an author is difficult to find, and a work is exploited even with legislation backing the use of such work, Attorneys and owners who may be remaining anonymous will certainly bring such action to lawsuit.

If a creator cannot find novel expression without compromising existing work, then it is not novel. Stealing an authors submitted work contradicts the premise of the Copyright office as a whole.

Regards,
Ken Giberson