

Frankly I think the government would be overstepping its bounds and proving its ignorance to technical issues if it were to rule against the free flow of thought and information by using the DMCA to crush DeCSS. I know it may seem that I am just another kid trying to defend what you call "hackers", but I come from a much more objective standpoint than that. Let information remain free, just make the act of illegally using such information be illegal, and please, be careful of what you deem "illegal."

Damien Germano
drknow60@hotmail.com