The MPAA and court must realize that this is not a case of piracy. It is about software development for a new operating system. Linux has no DVD support. DeCSS was written strictly as a program to allow DVD viewing within the Linux OS, nothing more.

If DeCSS must be referred to as "pirating" software, it is important to note that it is not the first of its kind. Other programs have been written although not as widely distributed. Why then does the MPAA sit up and take notice of DeCSS. It seems to me that it's all about the $$$.
Corporate America must not be allowed to regulate free software development.

I and many others are deeply upset that this sort of unfair "software regulation in the name of corporate enterprise" is being legislated.
