DVD is an emerging technology that should be available to all. DeCSS has been distributed all over the Internet including countries out of the jurisdiction of your body. It costs more to pirate a DVD than it does to buy one. The MPAA wants to use its considerable market power to force consumers into buying one operating system over another and keep the technology of DVD to themselves. This is contrary to a free market economy and to American capitalistic ideals. No harm can come from keeping the source code open and free to all. If the code is kept illegal, future uses of DVD may never be discovered. Please listen to the millions of individuals, news organizations, and proponents of free information and keep DeCSS available.
