Executive Summary

This report is the Information Collection Budget (ICB) of the Federal government for Fiscal Year 2006. This is OMB's annual report to Congress under the Paperwork Reduction Act (PRA) that describes the Federal government's information collection activities. As defined in the PRA, a "collection of information" includes far more than forms and other reporting requirements; it also includes recordkeeping requirements (such as the requirement to maintain personal income taxes records) as well as third-party disclosure requirements (such as the nutritional information found on packaged foods or the disclosure of closing costs that is provided to every homebuyer at closing).

As of the end of Fiscal Year 2005 (September 30, 2005), the Federal government imposed an annual paperwork burden on the public of about 8.4 billion hours. This represents an increase of 441 million hours, or 5.5 percent, over the FY 2004 year-end total of 7.9 billion hours. As in prior years, a number of factors contributed to the growth of Federal paperwork burden during FY 2005. As the ICB discusses, the major factors included the following:

- an increase in burden of approximately 419 million hours (representing 95% of the increase from FY 2004) that resulted from the implementation of recently-enacted statutes (the ICB classifies these burden changes as statutory "program changes");
- an increase in burden of approximately 19.4 million hours due to revised estimates of burden or due to factors that were independent of legislative or administrative action, such as increased reporting that results from increased economic activity (classified as "adjustments"); and
- a slight increase in burden of approximately 0.18 million hours resulting from discretionary actions taken by agencies (classified as agency discretionary "program changes").

Between FY 1999 and FY 2005, total Federal paperwork burden grew by 17 percent. The factors that resulted in the change in burden from FY 2004 to FY 2005 also explain this multi-year change. The 17 percent increase from FY 1999 to FY 2005 is attributed to a 12 percent increase in burden due to statutory program changes; a one percent increase in burden due to adjustments; a three percent increase through resolutions of PRA violations; and a 1 percent decrease in burden due to discretionary "program changes."

As noted above, the implementation of recently-enacted statutes resulted in burden increases that totaled approximately 419 million burden hours during FY 2005. Two statutes contributed to most of this increase: the statute that established the new Medicare Prescription Drug program (P.L. 108-173, with approximately 224 million hours); and the CAN-SPAM Act, the statute regulating unsolicited commercial e-mail (P.L. 108-187, with approximately 116 million hours). Since the PRA requires a balancing of a collection's estimated burden with its anticipated "practical utility," this new paperwork burden must be viewed in the context of the benefits that these statutory programs provide for the American public and the need for the Federal government to provide required services efficiently.

During FY 2005, a number of agencies took significant action to reduce burden. For example, the Departments of Justice (DOJ) and Treasury each reduced burden by more than one million hours. DOJ issued new regulations to allow the use of its new electronic Controlled Substances Ordering System to detect the diversion of controlled substances and provide customer service support (a decrease of 1.1 million hours). Treasury redesigned the IRS Form 1041 to streamline the requirements and make it easier and quicker to understand and file (a decrease of 18.8 million hours). Additional initiatives to reduce burden are described in Chapter 4 of this report.

These burden decreases were partially offset by increases in other agencies, including the Department of Transportation (DOT), the Federal Communications Commission (FCC), and the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). These increases were associated with agency efforts to improve program performance, increase consumer protections, and enhance customer service. DOT issued regulations on Vehicle Identification Numbers to help prevent thefts and improve the efficiency of recall campaigns (an increase of 1.1 million hours). FCC issued new regulations on “Truth in Billing” to make telephone bills easier to understand for consumers (an increase of 2.6 million hours). Finally, SEC required broker/dealers to provide more information to purchasers of securities about the conditions of their purchases (an increase of 3.9 million hours).

Looking forward to FY 2006, Federal agencies estimate that reported burden will increase an additional 3.6 percent, or 303 million hours. Most of this anticipated increase will result from an “adjustment” (of approximately 250 million hours) due to the implementation by the IRS of a new methodology for estimating the paperwork burden of the individual income tax returns. As this increase relates to how the IRS estimates paperwork burden, and is not associated with any actual change to a taxpayer’s reporting obligations, this “adjustment” does not reflect any real increase in the paperwork burden on taxpayers.

The majority of the remaining expected burden increase in FY 2006 is due to four significant activities. FCC will implement the Junk Fax Prevention Act (P.L. 109-21), which requires that information be disclosed on commercial faxes and allows recipients to “opt-out” from future faxes (anticipated increase of 24.8 million hours); both the required disclosure and the “opt-out” option qualify as third-party disclosures that are covered by the PRA. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) expects to impose new safety reporting requirements on manufacturers of drugs made for humans (anticipated increase of 5.8 million hours based on FDA’s proposed rule). Finally, the Department of Commerce will conduct the 2007 Economic Census, a once-every-five-year snapshot of the nation’s economy, which yields statistical information that is crucial to policy officials and researchers (anticipated increase of 4.9 million hours).

This report also documents the successful efforts of OMB and Federal agencies to sharply reduce agency violations of the PRA. In the late 1990s, many agencies frequently violated the PRA by allowing OMB's approval for their ongoing collections of information to lapse. Under the leadership of John Graham, the former Administrator for the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs (OIRA), OIRA staff and officials worked diligently with agencies across the government to address this issue. As a result of these collective efforts, the Executive Branch has completely eliminated the considerable backlog of unapproved collections and has dramatically reduced the incidence of new violations.

Finally, this report includes a chapter that describes the new methodology that the IRS has begun using to estimate the reporting burden imposed on individual taxpayers. Based on a statistical model (the Individual Taxpayer Burden Model), the new methodology seeks to estimate taxpayer paperwork burden more accurately, by taking into account the dramatic change in recent years in the way taxpayers prepare and file their tax returns by relying on computerized preparation and filing software. Today, less than 15 percent of all individual tax returns are prepared by hand. Similarly, over half of all tax returns are now filed electronically, over four times the 1993 percentage.

Chapter 1. Information Collection Budget for FY 2006

This report is the Information Collection Budget (ICB) of the Federal government for Fiscal Year 2006. This is an annual OMB report to Congress under the Paperwork Reduction Act (PRA) that describes the Federal government's information collection activities. As defined in the PRA, a "collection of information" includes far more than forms and other reporting requirements; it also includes recordkeeping requirements (such as the requirement to maintain personal income taxes records) as well as third-party disclosure requirements (such as the nutritional information found on all packaged foods or the disclosure of closing costs that is provided to every homebuyer at closing).

In FY 2005, the Federal government imposed approximately 8.4 billion hours of paperwork on the public. This represents a 5.5 percent increase over the 7.9 billion hours of FY 2004. Ninety-five percent of the increase is attributable to a significant expansion of Federal responsibilities under recently-enacted statutes (under the PRA, such changes are classified as statutory program changes). For the most part, in FY 2005, increases within the control of the agencies were balanced out by decreases also within the control of the agencies (under the PRA, such changes are classified as agency discretionary program changes).

In FY 2006, the Federal government anticipates a smaller overall increase in burden imposed on the public. As in FY 2005, the majority of new burden imposed on the public will be due to new statutory programs or requirements. In addition, there will be a significant increase in the reported burden (under the PRA, classified as a burden "adjustment") due to the implementation by the IRS of its new methodology for estimating paperwork burden. The new methodology produces a higher estimate of individual taxpayer reporting burden than using the IRS's prior burden-estimation methodology (see Chapter 3). Since the introduction of this new estimation methodology does not change a taxpayer's reporting obligations, the "adjustment" does not reflect any real increase in the paperwork burden on taxpayers.

Government-wide Totals

Total burden imposed by the Federal government has grown over the last five years. The reported burden in FY 1999 was 7.18 billion hours, and the Federal government estimates that burden will be 8.71 billion hours in FY 2006, about a 21 percent increase over 7 years, or just 3 percent a year. Figure 1 illustrates the total burden reported for each fiscal year starting with FY 1999.

As in previous ICBs, changes in burden are divided into two categories: “program changes” and “adjustments.” By accounting for burden changes in this manner, OMB is able to explain their origins. “Program changes” are of three kinds; they can result from new statutory requirements, discretionary actions taken by agencies, or new and resolved violations of the PRA (with the sharp reduction in PRA violations since 2001, such burden changes have become a much less significant component of the overall burden-change picture). “Adjustments” can reflect either agency re-estimates of burden (in which case the actual burden imposed on the public does not change) or changes in the number of respondents. This latter type of adjustment is beyond the control of agencies, and does not indicate a change in the burden per respondent. For example, the level of required reporting can increase, or decrease, due to increases or decreases in economic activity or the relevant population. In this regard, since FY 1999, nominal Gross Domestic Product has grown by 35 percent, and the U.S. population has grown by 6 percent. In addition, in the near future (with the retirement of the Baby Boom generation), the population that is eligible to receive Social Security and Medicare benefits will increase significantly, which will result in an increase in overall (but not per-respondent) paperwork burden as more individuals are receiving Social Security and Medicare benefits.

Figure 2 shows the program changes in burden during the period from FY 1999 through FY 2005 due to discretionary agency actions and due to recently-enacted statutes. In each of these fiscal years (except for FY 2001, for which information is unavailable¹), burden increases that were due to recently-enacted statutes were a significant factor in the overall increase in burden. In each of the fiscal years from 2002 through 2004, such statutory burden increases were greater than those burden changes that were due to agency discretionary actions. This was also the case during FY 2005, in which changes due to recently-enacted statutes increased paperwork burden by 418 million hours (comprising 95% of the total FY 2005 increase of 441 million hours); this increase in itself exceeds the total paperwork-burden inventory of any agency except Treasury (Treasury accounts for just under 80% percent of all Federal paperwork burden; the IRS itself accounts for over 76% of Federal paperwork burden). In comparison, in FY 2005 Federal agencies took actions within their discretion that increased burden by less than 0.05% of the increase due to recently-enacted statutes.

The remainder of the change in burden in each year was due to changes that did not affect the burden imposed on each respondent, such as increases in the size of the population, changes to agency estimates, or lapses in OMB approval. For example, the change to IRS's burden methodology discussed in Chapter 3 is an adjustment because it does not reflect an increase in the actual burden imposed on the public. Similarly, the transfer of programs between agencies, such as during the creation of the Department of Homeland Security, is reported as an adjustment decrease for the originating agency and an adjustment increase for the recipient agency. Adjustments by agency for FY 2005 and FY 2006 are shown in Appendix A. In FY 2005, total adjustments amounted to 19.1 million hours.

Agency Discretionary Changes

Table 1 presents the total burden reported by the 27 agencies that participate in the ICB. This represents all Executive Branch agencies that imposed a paperwork burden over 2 million hours in FY 2004. Table 1 also indicates, by agency, the changes to paperwork burden during FY 2005 that were attributable to the two major types of program changes. (Table 4 in Appendix A provides additional agency-by-agency information regarding paperwork burden. In particular, Table 4 includes changes that are due to adjustments.)

As Table 1 indicates, a significant number of agencies took discretionary action to reduce burden during FY 2005. This is presented more distinctly in Figure 3, which indicates that 12 of the 15 Cabinet departments achieved net reductions in burden resulting from discretionary actions. (Figure 4 shows the burden increases and decreases for other agencies.) The Departments of Justice (DOJ) and Treasury each reduced burden by more than one million hours.² DOJ issued new regulations to allow the use of its new electronic Controlled Substances Ordering System to detect the diversion of controlled substances and provide customer service support (decreasing burden by 1.1 million hours). Treasury redesigned the IRS form 1041 to streamline the requirements and make it easier to read and file (decreasing burden by 18.8 million hours).

Other agencies during FY 2005 increased burden, by more than one million hours each, through actions within their discretion. The Department of Transportation issued regulations for Vehicle Identification Numbers to help prevent thefts and improve the efficiency of manufacturer recall campaigns (an increase of 1.1 million hours). The Federal Communications Commission issued new regulations on “Truth in Billing” for telephone bills, giving consumers more information about the variety of fees and charges imposed by their telephone service providers (an increase of 2.6 million hours). The Securities and Exchange Commission enhanced requirements on broker/dealers to inform purchasers of securities of important, and potentially costly, conditions of their purchases (an increase of 3.9 million hours). And the Social Security Administration (SSA) began verifying employee data using the SSNVS, a secure, rapid, Internet-based system that protects privacy by only providing employers with a “match” or “no match” response and not linking names and SSNs (an increase of 2.0 million hours). Using SSNVS, employers can receive immediate verification of up to 10 names/SSN requests or can upload a file containing more names for overnight processing.

²Although the Department of State shows a large burden reduction for FY 2005, the reduction was due to a delay in a program that will take effect in the near future. On September 3, 2004, OMB approved a 2.7 million hour increase to implement a statutory requirement that all Visa Waiver Program countries produce biometric passports, which would have resulted in a large increase in the number of U.S. visitors requiring visas. The legislation was amended to extend the deadline 1 year (into FY 2006), thus the anticipated increase did not occur during FY 2005.

³This table includes a new entry representing interagency e-Gov initiatives with unified burden reporting. Much of the burden reported for this row has been transferred from other agencies during FY 2005 and is thus counted as an adjustment. OMB expects that the unified accounting will lead to a more accurate tally of the burden imposed because there will be a central count of the number of respondents and a consistent estimate of the burden per response. This is an improvement under the prior approach, under which the burden of the collections under each of these interagency initiatives was disaggregated amongst several agencies.

In FY 2006, Federal agencies anticipate more increases within their discretion that are designed to benefit the public. The largest increase will come from the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), as the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) expects to roll-out new safety reporting requirements for human drugs, thereby increasing health and safety protections for the public (an anticipated increase of 5.8 million hours, based on FDA's proposed rule). The Department of Commerce will also be increasing burden by almost 5 million hours as part of a regular cycle of burden increases and decreases; in FY 2006, the Census Bureau will be conducting the 2007 Economic Census, a survey conducted every five years that provides valuable information for policy officials and researchers. And it should be noted that the Department of Transportation is making a significant cut in its burden (by 7.3 million hours) by eliminating a requirement on short-haul commercial drivers as part of its Hours of Service rules.

Recently Enacted Statutes

As mentioned above, burden in FY 2005 increased by over 400 million hours due to the implementation of recently enacted statutes, and burden in FY 2006 is expected to increase by an additional 32 million hours for the same reason. The largest of the FY 2005 increases are shown in Table 2 below. The most significant of these changes involves the implementation of the Medicare Prescription Drug, Improvement, and Modernization Act (MMA) of 2003 (P.L. 108-173), which accounts for an increase in burden of 224 million hours in FY 2005 and an additional 4.7 million hours in FY 2006. The MMA established the most important new Medicare benefit in the program's 40-year history: new voluntary prescription drug coverage, which began on January 1, 2006. As of June 11, 2006, 38.2 million people are receiving comprehensive prescription drug coverage under the new Medicare program. The MMA also created the Medicare Advantage program to offer greater choices and higher quality care to beneficiaries through competition among private health plans.

The next largest statutory increase in burden involves the FCC's implementation of the CAN-SPAM Act (P.L. 108-187), the statute regulating unsolicited commercial e-mail. The statute requires every unsolicited commercial email to include information about how the recipient can have the sender remove the recipient's e-mail address from its mailing list; this qualifies as a third-party disclosure requirement under the PRA, and therefore a "collection of information" that imposes PRA burden.

In FY 2006, the largest anticipated increase is due to FCC's implementation of the Unsolicited Facsimile Advertisements, Junk Fax Prevention Act (P.L. 109-21) which permits the faxing of unsolicited advertisements to individuals and businesses with which the sender has an established business relationship and provides a process by which any sender must stop sending these faxes upon the request of the recipient. As is the case with the CAN-SPAM Act, the disclosure of this process to the fax recipient and the request to stop sending faxes are both collections that impose a small PRA burden on each person but apply to an extremely large number of persons.

Balancing a Collection of Information's Practical Utility with its Burden

While an underlying goal of the PRA is to minimize Federal paperwork burden on the public, the PRA also affirms agencies' need for information in order to perform their missions effectively. The PRA charges OMB with the responsibility of weighing the burdens of information collection on the public with the "practical utility" that the information will have for the performance of the agency's mission. Accordingly, OMB seeks to ensure that the burdens of agency information collections are justified by their usefulness to agency programs and missions.

The Practical Utility of Information that the Federal Government Collects

The Federal government provides the American people with a wide array of protections and services. These include homeland security, investing in education and training, strengthening health care, protecting the environment, ensuring a sound financial system, ⁴HHS implemented this collection through a final rule issued on February 20, 2003 without obtaining prior OMB approval under the PRA. OMB approved the collection on March 16, 2005. As a result, this collection is reflected as a program change due to statute in this year's ICB and reported as a violation in Appendix C.

enforcing safety requirements, promoting useful research, and supporting the American armed forces. To carry out all of these responsibilities carefully and effectively, the Federal government collects information. For example, to implement statutes that provide education and child tax benefits to working families, IRS must collect tax-return information to ensure that the tax benefits are provided (and in the correct amount) to the people who are entitled to receive them.

Why the Government Collects Information. The full range of the Federal government's responsibilities and public services are supported through the collection of information from the public. Consider the following examples:

- Funding Government Programs and Services. The Federal government collects information as part of its collection of individual and business income taxes, tariff duties, user fees, excise taxes, registration fees, license fees, and the other assessments that fund the Federal programs. The Federal tax system, in particular, involves a large amount of self-reporting and recordkeeping by individual and business taxpayers. As a whole, the Treasury Department is responsible for just under 80 percent of all information collection and recordkeeping conducted or required by the Federal government (and the IRS itself accounts for over 76 percent of the Federal paperwork burden).
- Ensuring Compliance with Health, Safety, and Environmental Standards. Federal agencies implement statutes that are aimed at ensuring that Americans have safe and healthy workplaces, a clean environment, and safe and efficient transportation systems. Accordingly, the Federal government collects information to verify compliance with Federal requirements by individuals, businesses, educational and nonprofit institutions, and State and local governments. The Federal government also requires individuals, firms, and other entities to retain information or to disclose information to demonstrate compliance. This information can be collected through reporting requirements, maintained by respondents through recordkeeping requirements, or distributed to third-parties through disclosure requirements.
- Providing Benefits to Americans. This category of information collection includes the administration of social welfare programs, management of entitlement programs (e.g., the Federal disability and retirement systems), grants and loans, contract procurement, and the request for a license or permit from the Federal government. Applicants for a benefit must provide information to the Federal government in support of their applications, to demonstrate that they are eligible to receive the benefit under the program's eligibility criteria. It is important that Federal agencies provide benefits to people who are eligible to receive them, and in the correct amount.
- Evaluating Government Performance for Citizens. The Federal government collects information to help manage, evaluate, and plan Federal programs. This involves activities such as developing new program strategies, making decisions about program operations, and assessing the efficiency or effectiveness of existing programs.

- Developing Statistical Information. The most well-known and comprehensive Federal collection of statistical information is the Decennial Census. There are many other such data collections, including the Economic Census that the Department of Commerce conducts every five years and the monthly Current Population Survey jointly conducted by the Departments of Commerce and Labor.
- Finding Solutions through Research. Collections of information involving research are those designed to test a hypothesis, permit conclusions to be drawn, and thereby develop or contribute to generalizable knowledge. These constitute substantially less than one percent of the information collection activity of the Federal government.

Statutory Responsibilities. As discussed above and as illustrated by Table 2, new statutes (and amendments to existing statutes) typically require the Federal government to collect more, not less, information. In this regard, many existing reporting, recordkeeping and third-party disclosure requirements are mandated by or necessary to implement existing statutes. Agencies make significant efforts to implement these programs with the least burden possible, thus minimizing the burden increase that is due to new statutes. Nonetheless, the extent to which an agency is able to minimize the paperwork burden that it imposes, when the agency implements a new statute or a statutory amendment, is often constrained by the statute itself, which can either mandate the collection of particular types of information or require the agency to take a specified action (such as the creation of the new Medicare prescription drug benefit) that will require the agency to collect particular information to implement the program successfully.

Factors Outside the Control of Federal Agencies. Even in the absence of statutory or agency administrative changes, the paperwork burden that is imposed by Federal collections can grow over time due to a number of factors beyond the agencies' direct control. These include economic growth, demographic trends, and natural disasters.

- Economic Growth. A notable source of increased paperwork burden that agencies cannot control is growth in the national economy (and from FY 1999 through FY 2005, the nominal Gross Domestic Product (GDP) grew by 35%). Many of the Federal government's program responsibilities are affected by transactions in the economy. During periods of economic prosperity, the number of employed people increases, which in turn increases the number of (1) IRS Forms W-2 that employers send to their employees, (2) people filing income tax returns, and (3) disclosures and disclaimers related to pension funds. When people invest additional earnings in an expanding economy, there is a corresponding increase in the number of disclosures, disclaimers, and IRS Forms 1099 that are provided to investors. There may also be an increase in the number of filings with the - Securities and Exchange Commission as more companies offer securities on the market. As the number of businesses grows, there are increases in the number of loan applications to the Small Business Administration (SBA), the number of respondents to Occupation Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) collections, and the number of reports to the IRS of payments made to employees. If people travel abroad more frequently, there is an increase in the number of passport applications submitted to the State Department and an increase in the number of declarations made to the Bureau of Customs and Border Protection when they return to the United States.

- Demographic Trends. Demographic trends that affect the size and age of the population are a second factor that can increase burden. The population has been increasing at a rate of approximately 0.9 percent annually (for a growth of 6% from FY 1999 through FY 2005). As the number of people and households in the country rises, the burden imposed by the Decennial Census and income taxes increases, simply because there are more people to count or who are required to file income taxes. Similarly, the aging of the Baby Boom generation will impact the government's information collection activity. Over the next few decades, as the percentage of the population over 65 years of age grows by 5 percent per year today, increasing to 7 percent per year by 2020, the burden of collections from the Social Security Administration and the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services will rise dramatically.
 - Natural Disasters. Hurricane Katrina provided a dramatic reminder that natural disasters are another significant factor that can increase information collection burden. In the immediate aftermath of a major disaster, for example, the Department of Homeland Security offers assistance to residents and businesses to begin the rebuilding process. This often requires aid applicants to provide information when applying for benefits to demonstrate their eligibility. In the longer term, SBA and the Department of Agriculture have assistance programs specifically for businesses and farmers in devastated areas. The information collection burden of these assistance programs will therefore be higher during years in which several major natural disasters occur, even though these assistance programs (and the agency collections of information) themselves were not changed by the Federal Government.

Figure 5 compares, for the period from FY 1999 through FY 2005 (and the estimates for FY 2006), the level of increase in the nominal GDP and real GDP with the changes in paperwork burden attributable to recently-enacted statutes, agency discretionary action, and adjustments (for each element, the FY 1999 level is designated as 100, and the changes in later years are a percentage comparison to the FY 1999 level).

Chapter 2. Paperwork Reduction Act Compliance

The Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995 (PRA) requires federal agencies and the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) to ensure that information collected from the public minimizes burden and maximizes practical utility. The Act assigns each agency's Chief Information Officer (CIO) the responsibility for ensuring that the agency complies with the PRA. OMB's Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs (OIRA) is responsible for approving information collection reviews under the PRA. OIRA desk officers review and approve over 3,200 information collections each year with an active inventory of over 8,400 collections.

To help the public and the agencies monitor compliance with the information collection provisions of the PRA, OMB annually publishes a list of violations (see Appendix C). During FY 2005, the agencies reported 60 information collections that expired and were reported as violations. In addition, the agencies reported 37 pre-existing collections that had expired before October 1, 2004 and were on-going violations until their reinstatement dates in FY 2005 (10/1/2004 to 9/30/2005).

Achieving Zero Violations

Agencies have made great progress in reducing the number of violations that occur and in resolving them more promptly, thereby working toward the OMB goal of achieving zero violations. However, it is still the case that a number of collections become violations each year because agencies do not submit to OMB, on a timely basis, requests for renewal of OMB approval under the PRA. Thus, even if these violations are resolved quickly, agencies are nevertheless out of compliance with the law for relatively brief periods of time.

OMB tracks the number of information collections that expire each month and determines whether the collections are violations. Each year, OMB lists in the ICB the total number of agency violations. Figure 3 represents the total number of agency violations that occurred during recent fiscal years and the total number of pre-existing violations carried over from the previous fiscal year.

OMB is committed to working with agencies to reduce the number of new violations and resolve all pre-existing violations. Table 3 lists the total number of information collections that expired in FY 2005 and were reported as new violations. OMB is pleased to report that 57 percent of agencies reported zero violations. Of the 27 agencies included in the ICB (plus E-Gov), three agencies represent 65 percent of the total number of violations reported in FY 2005. Moreover, there were no unresolved violations at the end of FY 2005 (and thus no carryover violations into FY 2006), and there have only been 6 violations during the first eight months of FY 2006.

Table 3 rates each of the 28 agencies for their compliance. For FY 2005, OMB rated three agencies as poor. This is significant improvement over FY 2004 in which eight agencies received a poor rating. Similarly, the number of agencies rated as good increased from 13 to 15 (plus an additional agency not rated last year, E-Gov).

Steps to Improve Agency Compliance

As part of standard procedures to ensure PRA compliance, each month OMB sends an inventory to each agency which lists all of the collections that will expire in the next 150 days. This provides the agency with ample time to prepare a 60-day Federal Register Notice, incorporate any public comments from the Notice into the collection, submit the collection to OMB for a 30-day review period, and receive clearance for the collection. In addition to the routine efforts to inform agency staff, OMB has taken some additional measures to eliminate violations, including:

- October 2004: OMB created a new Form 83-D to record PRA collections that an agency plans to discontinue. This form helps to focus agency attention, as early as possible, on identifying those continuing collections for which a renewal of OMB's approval is required, thereby assisting agencies in reducing the number of violations. In addition, this form also helps the agencies and OMB to maintain a current record of discontinued collections, to ensure they will not be considered violations in the ICB. The form thereby reduces the amount of time and energy that the agencies and OMB must devote each year, in preparing the ICB, to distinguishing between those expirations of OMB approval that reflected discontinued collections versus those that reflected violations.
- April 2005: OMB met with the Chief Information Officers (CIO) and General Counsels (GC) of the eight agencies with the largest number of violations reported in FY 2004. OMB discussed with the agency CIOs and GCs methods for reducing the number of violations. OMB requested that the agency CIOs ensure all their violations in FY 2005 be resolved, with OMB approval, by the end of FY 2005. The agencies achieved this goal and all reported violations in FY 2005 were resolved by September 30, 2005. Thus, in contrast to prior years in which agencies began the fiscal year with carryover violations from the prior year, agencies began fiscal year 2006 with no carryover violations, and there have only been 6 violations involving expired approvals through the first eight months of FY 2006 (see Figure 6).
- October 2005: In the FY 2005 ICB Bulletin—which OMB sends to agencies requesting data and information that OMB uses to prepare the ICB—OMB not only asked agencies to identify all violations that occurred in the past fiscal year (as has been customary), but OMB also asked agencies to provide OMB with a monthly status report on all information collections that expire during the fiscal year (FY 2005).

Chapter 3. The New IRS Methodology for Estimating Individual Taxpayer Burden

The IRS imposes a large share (over 76 percent) of the Federal government's reporting burden on the public. In light of this fact, the IRS has devoted considerable resources to measuring the burden it imposes on taxpayers so that policymakers and the public can better understand the cost to society of tax collection and compliance with the Internal Revenue Code. The IRS is in the process of improving the accuracy and transparency of taxpayer burden estimates. Starting in FY 2006, the IRS began using a new methodology based on a statistical model—the Individual Taxpayer Burden Model (ITBM)—to estimate the reporting burden imposed on individual taxpayers.⁵

This chapter provides an overview of the new methodology, which the IRS and OMB view as a significant and positive development in the Federal government's estimation of the information collection burden imposed by the Internal Revenue Code. Over the past several years, OMB has reported to Congress periodically on the progress that the IRS has made in developing this new approach.⁶

The IRS has sought to improve the way in which it measures taxpayer-compliance burden because of the dramatic change in recent years in the way taxpayers prepare and file their tax returns. No longer relying on paper forms, typewriters, envelopes, and postage stamps, about 85 percent of taxpayers (or their paid preparers) sit down at the computer and, prompted by software, enter tax information that the software then uses to prepare a tax return. For more than 50 percent of individual income tax payers, the return is transmitted electronically to the IRS and State revenue agencies. (In other cases, the electronically prepared paper return is still submitted by mail or hand delivery.) This transition to a 21st century information technology driven process has caused IRS to rethink the concept of “paperwork” burden and to develop a new way to estimate it.

Since the development of IRS’ previous burden estimation methodology in the mid-1980s, improved technology and modeling sophistication have enabled the IRS to improve the burden estimates. The old model was first used in 1988 and was based on survey data from 1984. It measured only “tax form” burden and it relied on questionable technical assumptions. For example, it assumed that adding lines to tax forms always increases burden when, in fact, new lines can make filling out forms easier for taxpayers. Because the old model was developed to measure the paperwork burden of completing and submitting paper forms, it also failed to measure the taxpayer burden of electronic filing methods (e.g., TeleFile and e-file). It also failed to reflect accurately the burden for those taxpayers who used paid tax preparers (as more than 60 percent of taxpayers do).

Perhaps more importantly, taxpayer interviews show that only a modest portion (under 16 percent) of the total time burden for individual taxpayers is due to tax form preparation and submission. The vast majority of time burden is from recordkeeping, gathering tax materials (including using IRS services), using paid-professional services, and tax planning. These activities generally are not closely associated with the additional tax schedules and forms that often are included with the basic Form 1040. As a result, it is conceptually difficult to associate this burden with specific forms, schedules, and lines, and such allocations of burden would necessarily be arbitrary. Thus, the ITBM includes these estimates in the overall burden figure (because they are an integral part of overall burden), without assigning the burden to specific forms.

The new model accounts for the major changes over the past two decades in the way that taxpayers prepare and file their returns, most notably the remarkable increase in the use of electronic preparation methods. Today, less than 15 percent of all individual tax returns are prepared by hand. Similarly, over half of all tax returns are now filed electronically, over four times the 1993 percentage.⁷

In this environment, in which many taxpayers’ activities are no longer as directly associated with particular forms (entering figures on lines, filling out worksheets, transferring line items from one form to another), estimating burden on a form-by-form basis is no longer an appropriate measurement of taxpayer burden. In addition, and as explained below, the new methodology takes into account broader and more comprehensive taxpayer characteristics and activities. As a result, IRS can generate a more accurate and useful estimate of taxpayer burden. A Joint Economic Committee study issued while ITBM was being tested for reliability found that “its compliance estimates are consistent with other studies.”⁸

Moreover, the new ITBM also represents a substantial step forward in IRS’ ability to estimate the burden impact of administrative and legislative changes on individual taxpayers. IRS will now be able to analyze the burden impacts of proposals to revise the Tax Code or IRS administrative procedures. For the first time, the burden implications of achieving policy objectives through new legislative and administrative tax proposals can be estimated and considered before the changes are adopted and implemented.⁹

The New IRS Methodology for Estimating Individual Taxpayer Reporting Burden.

The ITBM’s approach to measuring burden focuses on the characteristics and activities of individual taxpayers rather than the forms they ultimately use. The ITBM output is driven by results from a taxpayer survey conducted in 2000 and 2001. Key determinants of taxpayer burden in the model are the way the taxpayer prepares the return (e.g., with or without software or a paid preparer) and the taxpayer’s activities, such as gathering tax materials, form completion, recordkeeping and tax planning. In contrast, the previous estimates primarily focused on the length and complexity of each tax form. The changes between the old and new burden estimates are due to the improved ability of the new methodology to measure burden and the expanded scope of what is measured. These changes create a one-time shift (upward) in the estimate of burden levels that reflects the better measurement of the new model. The differences in estimates between the new and old models do not reflect any change in the actual burden experienced by taxpayers, but rather the ability to measure burden more accurately.

Under the ITBM, burden is defined as the time and out-of-pocket costs incurred by taxpayers to comply with the Federal tax system. For the first time, IRS is estimating the time expended and the out-of-pocket costs separately. The new methodology distinguishes among preparation methods, taxpayer activities, types of individual taxpayer, filing methods, and income levels. Indicators of complexity in tax laws, as reflected in tax forms and instructions, are incorporated in the model.

The new model follows IRS’ classification of taxpayer types as “individual” taxpayers and “self-employed” taxpayers. Individual taxpayers are taxpayers who file any type of Form 1040. Self-Employed taxpayers are individual taxpayers who file a Form 1040 and a Schedule C, C-EZ, E, or F, or Form 2106. All other individual taxpayers using a Form 1040 are “Wage and Investment” taxpayers. The taxpayer’s choice of preparation method is identified as a major factor influencing burden levels. The preparation methods are (1) self-prepared without software; (2) self-prepared with software; and (3) used a paid tax preparer. The separate types of taxpayer activities measured in the model are (1) recordkeeping; (2) form completion; (3) form submission (electronic and paper); (4) tax planning; (5) use of services (IRS and paid professional); and (6) gathering tax materials.

⁸“Individuals and the Compliance Costs of Taxation,” A Joint Economic Committee Study, Joint Economic Committee, United States Congress, November 2005, p. 4, <http://www.house.gov/jec/publications/109/11-07-05taxcompliance.pdf>.

⁹For an illustration of how ITBM can produce burden estimates for proposed tax provisions, see Allen H. Lerman and Peter S. Lee, “Evaluating the Ability of the Individual Taxpayer Burden Model to Measure Components of Taxpayer Burden: The Alternative Minimum Tax as a Case Study,” in Recent IRS Research on Tax Administration and Compliance: Proceedings of the 2004 IRS Research Conference (June 2004). <http://www.irs.gov/pub/irs-soi/04lerman.pdf>.

Accounting for Individual Taxpayer Paperwork Burden with the New Methodology.

In the same way that modern tax return preparation and filing methods required IRS to update its burden estimation methodology, IRS now accounts for the PRA burden of individual taxpayers differently. Previously, OMB Control Number 1545-0074 was assigned to Form 1040 and its associated schedules. Each of the other tax forms that can be attached to a 1040, 1040A, 1040NR, or 1040EZ were assigned separate control numbers, and each had a separate burden estimate, generally based on the length and complexity of the form and associated instructions. Under the new methodology, all forms used by individual taxpayers are assigned this single control number.

Aggregating the burden for all individual forms and schedules and using the new methodology results in a total of three billion hours assigned to OMB Control Number 1545-0074, which is 1.44 billion hours higher than was assigned to Control Number 1545-0074 for 2003. Approximately 1.19 billion hours of this increase, however, is due to the inclusion of the previously separate burden estimates from other control numbers which are now included in Control Number 1545-0074. Excluding this double-counting, as well as some small changes due to tax form changes and increases in the numbers of taxpayers between 2003 and 2004, results in an adjustment increase of roughly 250 million hours. This adjustment increase, however, reflects a new estimate of burden, not an actual change in burden imposed on taxpayers.

Under the PRA and OMB regulations, agencies have the discretion to seek separate OMB approvals for individual forms, recordkeeping requirements, and third-party reporting requirements or to combine any number of forms, recordkeeping requirements, and/or third-party disclosure requirements (usually related in subject matter) under one OMB control number. Agency decisions on whether to group individual requirements under a single OMB control number or to disaggregate them and request separate OMB control numbers are based largely on considerations of administrative practicality. Because the new methodology looks at the burden that is imposed on a category of taxpayers for satisfying their tax-compliance responsibilities (rather than looking at the burden that is imposed by filling out each individual form), IRS has sought and obtained OMB approval of all the individual tax forms—which it views as a single “collection of information”—to be grouped under one control number. This is consistent with how most taxpayers prepare their tax returns (using computer software or hiring a paid preparer).

Chapter 4. Agency Initiatives to Reduce Burden

As part of this year's ICB report, OMB requested that agencies provide a status report on their previously proposed initiatives to reduce burden on the American public. These burden reduction initiatives vary across government agencies; however, they are designed to improve program performance, reduce the burden response, eliminate unnecessary requirements, or to encourage a comprehensive review of an entire regulation or program.

OMB received updates from 27 federal agencies, covering 39 separate initiatives. The majority of the 39 initiatives has been completed or is nearing completion. The remaining projects are on track to be finished within the next several years as agencies pursue the necessary changes to statutes or regulations to realize the reductions they identified. The completed initiatives accounted for over 46.7 million hours of burden on the public. When the ongoing initiatives are finished, burden is expected to drop by another 6 million hours.

Department of Agriculture	Status: COMPLETED

Office:	Rural Housing Service
Initiative Title:	Reinvention of the Sections 514, 515, 516 and 521 Multi-Family Housing Programs
Description:	The Rural Housing Service (RHS) is streamlining and reengineering its regulations, processes, and techniques in the administration of the Multi-Family Housing (MFH) programs. RHS' interim final rule consolidates policies outlined in 14 separate regulations and combines them into one regulation. In addition, the regulation establishes handbooks that will provide respondents with administrative guidance on program requirements and procedures. The increased ease of finding information through the use of an electronic handbook will significantly reduce burden on respondents and eliminate inconsistencies in interpretation of Multi-Family Housing Programs.

Office: Bureau of the Census
Initiative Title: Automated Export System
Description: The Automated Export System (AES) is a collaborative effort by the U.S. Census Bureau (Census) and the Bureau of Customs and Border Protection (CBP) at the Department of Homeland Security. The AES will eliminate the manual process for filing the Shipper's Export Declaration (SED) and Outbound Carrier Manifests by requiring the U.S. export trade community to file SED information electronically to the CBP mainframe computer system or through the Census Internet service, AESDirect. The AES initiative will reduce burden on respondents by reducing costs, removing the number of duplicative submissions reported monthly, making the filing more user-friendly, and improving the efficiency of the data collection process.

Estimated Reduction: -167,000 hours
Collection Affected: 0607-0152
Expected Completion: Summer 2006
Potential Hurdles to Completion: The Bureau is dependent on successfully working with other Federal agencies to complete final regulations.
Status: Finalizing regulations.

Department of Defense	Status: IN PROGRESS

Office: Defense Procurement and Acquisition Policy / Defense Acquisition Regulations System
Initiative Title: DFARS Transformation: Clarification of Statutory Restrictions on Acquisition of Foreign Ball and Roller Bearings
Description: This initiative is a comprehensive review to streamline and assess the practical utility of information collections associated with the DoD acquisition process. This initiative eliminates the requirement for contractors to submit a written plan for transitioning from non-domestic to domestically manufactured bearings. The Restriction on Acquisition of Ball and Roller Bearings clause requires contractor retention of records showing compliance with the restriction until 3 years after final payment. This change implements a complex DFARS transformation proposal to delete unusable exceptions and waiver authorities in the regulations and establish a consistent exception for bearings.

Estimated Reduction: -301,600 hours
Collection Affected: 0704-0229
Expected Completion: June 2006
Potential Hurdles to Completion: None.
Status: OIRA approved the final rule for publication on January 12, 2006. As of February 10, 2006, DoD is providing congressional notification. DoD estimates that the final rule will publish in the Federal Register on or after March 10, 2006.

Department of Defense

Status: IN PROGRESS

Office: Office of Assistant Secretary of Defense (ASD) for Health Affairs
Initiative Title: Burden Reduction for Health Care Collections
Description: The Military Health System is promoting a greater use of electronic transactions and the elimination of inefficient paper forms. Electronic formats are expected to provide a significant savings and burden reduction to the health care industry. Health care providers will be able to use electronic formats to bill for their services and health plans will require standard electronic claims, referral authorizations, and other transactions.
Collections Affected: 0720-0001, 0720-0006, 0720-0013
Estimated Reduction: -95,756 hours
Expected Completion: December 2006
Potential Hurdles to Completion: Changes in legislation and regulatory process.
Status: OASD(HA) is on target to finalize this initiative by December 2006.

Department of Defense

Status: COMPLETED

Office: Office of the Under Secretary of Defense (AT&L) / Defense Procurement and Acquisition Policy / Defense Acquisition Regulations System
Initiative Title: Elimination of Requirement to Furnish Written Assurance of Technical Data Conformity
Description: This initiative is being taken to reduce the amount of paperwork contractors have to complete while ensuring technical data quality is protected as part of the performance of contracts within the DoD acquisition process. Section 844 of the National Defense Authorization Act for FY 2004 eliminated the statutory requirement for certain data assurance, and DoD technical experts determined that there was no continued need for such assurance as a matter of policy. In response, DoD published an interim rule in June, 2004 and a final rule in November 2004 that removed the clause requiring contractors to furnish written assurance that technical data is complete and accurate. This change reduces paperwork for contractors, but does not diminish the contractor's obligation to provide technical data that is complete and adequate.

Estimated Reduction: -126,886 hours
Collection Affected: 0704-0369
Date of Completion: June 2005

Department of Education

Status: IN PROGRESS

Initiative Title:

EDFacts

Description:

EDFacts will fundamentally transform the way that the Department accesses information and meets the requirements of the No Child Left Behind Act, while concurrently reducing respondent burden. The initiative continues the development of an Education Data Exchange Network (EDEN), providing State Education Agencies and the Federal government the capacity to transfer and analyze information about education programs. When fully implemented, EDEN will not only provide timely performance data to education decision makers and grant managers, but also streamline the data collection process and reduce the burden of grant reporting. Since summer 2005, the Department has committed additional leadership and financial resources to the initiative and is developing the detailed project plan needed to successfully complete it.

Estimated Reduction: -410,000 hours

Collections Affected: 1870-0500 (-370,571 hours), 1820-0644 (-18,312 hours), 1810-0614 (-21,117 hours)

Expected Completion: January 2007.

Potential Hurdles to Completion:

EDFacts and EDEN are dependent upon State Education Agencies to furnish mutually agreed upon information. Changes at the State level can impact the potential success of this initiative.

Status:

The Department expects to be able to collect directory data for the 2006-2007 school year by November of 2006, and demographic data for this school year by January 2007.

Department of Energy		Status: COMPLETED
Office:	Energy Information Administration (EIA)

The system, which has been in operation for 2005 quarters 1 through 3, has reduced respondent and Federal contractor processing burden. Electronic submission has reduced the time required to fill out the form and to correct edits. EIA estimates that respondent burden for Forms EIA-3 and EIA-5 has fallen on average by about 14%. EIA estimates that the new systems save about 2/3rds of the cost of a Federal contract employee or approximately $90,000 per year.
Estimated Reduction:	-1,289 hours; $90,000 per year
Collections Affected:	1905-0167

Of these, 33 collections accounted for 73% of the total HHS burden. In light of this and in response to the OMB direction to achieve 1% reduction in burden, HHS implemented an initiative to achieve maximum possible burden reduction among these largest collections in three of the eleven HHS Operating Divisions: CMS, FDA, and ACF.

Office: Single Family Housing
Initiative Title: Paperless Single Family Mortgage Case Binder
Description: The Office of Single Family Housing issued Mortgagee Letter 2005-36 announcing the Lender Insurance (LI) program. This program streamlines the process of filing FHA insurance-related data, allowing lenders to submit case binders in electronic form. HUD will consider broadening the use of the paperless case binder and may consider the electronic replacement mandatory for data collection purposes. This represents a substantial reduction to lender back-office workloads. In addition, FHA is reviewing all of its forms to see which may be eliminated or consolidated. It will also replace the mortgage credit analysis worksheet, a cumbersome calculation document, with a simple loan transmittal during the second quarter of FY 2006.

Description:	MMS's Offshore Minerals Management (OMM) program has completed a pilot that focused on streamlining the information collections and operations associated with regulatory compliance and the conduct of well drilling/completion/workover operations on the Outer Continental Shelf (OCS). These efforts were one of several initial steps in OMM's E-Government Transformation Project. This project was designed to streamline OMM's processes, reduce data redundancy, and improve the quality, timeliness, completeness, and compliance of the information exchange between OMM and the OCS industry. The pilot has ended and the system is operational. Since E-Well has been operating, about 40-50% of the forms are now being submitted electronically. Electronic submission has reduced the time for submitting most of these four forms by half.

Initiative Title: OSHA Standards on Mechanical Power Presses
Description: OSHA seeks to initiate a rulemaking to update some of its standards that are based on adopted National Consensus Standards. One standard that will be reviewed under this project is the Standard on Mechanical Power Presses. OSHA adopted that standard in 1971 based on a voluntary consensus standard. OSHA has decided to update this standard to address industry concerns that it is out-of-date and could be made safer and less burdensome. The Mechanical Power Press standards require employers to conduct inspection and prepare certification records of mechanical power presses. Any modification to the frequency of inspection or removal of the certification records will significantly reduce burden hours on respondents.

Collection Affected: 1218-0229

Expected Completion: Summer or Fall of 2006

Initiative Title: Employers Annual Federal Tax Program (Form 944)
Description: The purpose of this Taxpayer Burden Reduction project is to reduce burden on the smallest of small business taxpayers by establishing new rules and processes that will allow certain employers to file their Employment Tax (ET) returns, as well as pay the ET tax due, on an annual rather than quarterly basis. Currently, Form 941 must be filed quarterly, regardless of the amount the employer owes. There are approximately 6 million entities that file Form 941 each year, for a total of 24 million returns. This program will allow businesses with less than $1,000 in tax liability to pay what they owe in an annual return, reducing burden on the very smallest business taxpayers.

Burden Reduction: To be determined.
Collections Affected: 1545-0066, 1545-0148, 1545-0188, 1545-0233, 1545-1054, and 1545-1057

Initiative Title: Simplification of the Extension Application Process

Description: The purpose of this project is to reduce the burden associated with applying for an extension to file an income tax return. The project will create efficiency in processing extension applications, which will reduce the number of IRS forms and facilitate e-filing. Currently, taxpayers are allowed a maximum of 6-months to file a tax return. The regulations require that taxpayers request such extension by the due date of the return to be filed. In addition, where corporate taxpayers are allowed a single 6-month extension, the regulations provide that all other taxpayers make duplicate requests to obtain the maximum 6-months. This initiative proposes to create a single 6-month extension period. This will eliminate the duplication in making multiple requests. In addition, the initiative will encourage e-filing by creating an automatic feature to extension requests by removing the requirements for signature and explanation.

Initiative Title:	Veteran Claim Partnerships with Social Security Administration
Description:	The Veterans Benefit Administration's (VBA) Compensation and Pension Service partnered with the Social Security Administration (SSA) to use an application allowing VA regional offices to verify SSA data when processing a claim. This partnership reduces the need to contact claimants for additional information that was not provided with the application, such as the SSN of a spouse or a copy of the SSA award letter showing the amount of benefits received. VBA is also in the process of working with SSA to allow the Veterans Health Administration (VHA) employees to use its application to verify SSA data. This would reduce the need for VHA to contact claimants to obtain SSA income when determining health benefit eligibility. This initiative provides a crosscutting approach that will enhance the verification process needed for processing claims and reduce duplicative information burden on veterans and their families.

Description:	The Environmental Protection Agency, through rulemaking, will reduce the paperwork burden imposed by regulations under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA). The RCRA Burden Reduction Rule will streamline information collection requirements to help ensure that only the information that is needed to effectively implement our hazardous waste program is collected. In last year's ICB, we estimated a burden reduction of approximately 350,000 hours; however, during the rulemaking process it was discovered that our estimates did not take into consideration de facto industry practices that were previously incorporated in a separate information collection. As a result, the revised burden reduction estimates are significantly lower compared to last year's estimates.

Collections Affected: Form F-1; OMB Control No. 3235-0258
Date of Completion: July 2005

Securities and Exchange Commission

Status: COMPLETED

Initiative Title: Automatic Shelf Registration for Form S-3 and F-3 Filers
Description: As part of the Securities Act Reform proposals described in Release No. 33-8501 issued on 11/03/04, eligible “well-known seasoned issuers” could register unspecified amounts of different specified types of securities on automatically effective Form S-3 or Form F-3 registration statements. Thus, these issuers would have significant latitude in determining the types and amounts of their securities or those of their eligible subsidiaries that could be offered without any potential time delay or other obstacles imposed by the registration process. Issuers using an automatic shelf registration statement also would be permitted to pay filing fees in advance or on a “pay-as-you-go” basis.

Estimated Reduction: -48,826 hours
Collections Affected: 3235-0073, 3235-0256
Expected Completion: July 2005

Social Security Administration

Status: IN PROGRESS

Initiative Title: Signature Proxy
Description: SSA is implementing a Signature Proxy initiative as an alternative to the traditional pen and ink or “wet” signature to eliminate the need to retain paper applications. The Signature Proxy initiative allows technicians to process the application without a signature. Additionally, it permits SSA to store and process the entire benefit application electronically, thus reducing costs associated with mailing and storing physical files.

Estimated Reduction: -54,259 hours in FY 2005. SSA projects further burden reductions of -87,615 hours during the remaining 4 years of the initiative, for a total of -404,719 hours.

Collections Affected: 0960-0618, 0960-0003, 0960-0010, 0960-0012, 0960-0013, 0960-0014, 0960-0004, 0960-0229, 0960-0444, and 0960-0416

Expected Completion: September 2009

Potential Hurdles to Completion: None.

Update: The Signature Proxy initiative is ongoing and SSA has added collections not cited in last year's discussion of the initiative.

Social Security Administration	Status: IN PROGRESS

Initiative Title: Social Security Number Verification Service (SSNVS)
Description: Employers must frequently verify employee names and Social Security Numbers (SSNs) to ensure accurate wage reporting and tax data. To do this, employers currently contact the Social Security Administration via phone, mail, or by sending in diskettes and magnetic tape for verification. This process is time-consuming and delays transmission of the information to employers. However, beginning in FY 2005, SSA began verifying employee data using the SSNVS, a secure, rapid, Internet-based system that protects privacy by only providing employers with a "match" or "no match" response and not linking names and SSNs. Using SSNVS, employers can receive immediate verification of up to 10 names/SSN requests or can upload a file containing more names for overnight processing.

Burden Reduction: -223,750 hours
Collections Affected: 0960-0669, 0960-0508
Expected Completion: 2010
Potential Hurdles to Completion: None.
Update: SSA projects that in the first full FY of implementation, 10 percent of the 1.1 million requests will migrate to SSNVS, and that this percentage will increase each year following the SSNVS rollout. In addition, because of the late SSNVS rollout in FY 2005 the associated decrease in the forms under OMB 0960-0508 will not be realized until FY 2007.

Appendix B. Significant Paperwork Reductions and Increases — FY 2005 & FY 2006

The Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995 (PRA) requires the head of each agency, supported by its Chief Information Officer (CIO), to be responsible for the agency's information collection activities. Agencies are expected to develop and coordinate initiatives that will produce meaningful improvements for the public. This includes reducing the amount of paperwork required of the public.

This appendix highlights significant burden changes agencies made in the last year, as well as significant burden changes expected in FY 2006. To identify the source of the burden reduction or increase, the appendix is divided into five sub-categories for reductions (cutting redundancy, using information technology, changing regulations, changing forms, and miscellaneous actions), and three categories for increases (caused by statute, changing regulations, miscellaneous actions). When legislation or Administration policies result in an increase in burden to achieve the benefits of the law or new program, the appendix includes the statute title and public law number when available.
