Product information, including uses/applications and source(s) of imports:

The subject electrical receptacles are a type of surge protection devices (SPD). SPDs are designed to reduce the random energy surges of voltage transients and noise that are present in utility power lines, data networks, telephone lines, closed circuits, cable television, and other power or control lines connected to electronic equipment. SPDs accomplish this task by blocking or diverting to ground any voltages that exceed a safe threshold. Surge protective receptacles are designed for use as a hard-wired device and offer a 3-level surge protection for phase to neutral, phase to ground, and neutral to ground. A monitor/indicator light-emitting diode (LED) is on continuously when active and off when the protection circuit is deactivated due to excessive transients.

The principal U.S. import source of this product is China. Dutiable U.S. imports under HTS subheading 8536.30.80 (a broader category than is covered by this bill) totaled $326.1 million in 2007, with China accounting for $214.5 million in shipments.

Technical comments:⁴

The proponent has indicated that the scope of the bill can be narrowed by eliminating the surge suppressor strips from the scope. Although the proponent indicated that the intended scope would be residential, industrial, and hospital grade protective receptacles, the HTS does not contain definitions for those grades. Unless the terms can be defined in a legal note, the reference to product grades should be eliminated from the article description. The proponent reported that it is working with the office of Senator Charles E. Schumer to produce a Senate version of this bill that will incorporate a revised, narrower article description, but the revised language is not yet available.

⁴ The Commission may express an opinion on the HTS classification of a product to facilitate consideration of the bill. However, by law, only the U.S. Customs Service is authorized to issue a binding ruling on this matter. The Commission believes that the U.S. Customs Service should be consulted prior to enactment of the bill.
