SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Herbert Brownell Jr. sent the bulk of his personal papers to the Eisenhower Library in 1988 and 1989 when he was preparing to retire from active law practice. The initial shipment was opened to research in April 1992. This accretion to the collection was received from Brownell's family after his death in 1996. It consists of his subject and correspondence files covering the last eight years of his life. There are also several files of earlier material that Brownell had not included in the initial shipment.

The accretion has been organized into five series, following the same general arrangement scheme as the main Brownell collection. The first series contains Brownell's general correspondence with his friends and the general public, covering 1988 to 1996. Of particular importance in this series is Brownell's correspondence with historians who interviewed him about his work in politics and the Eisenhower administration.

The second series contains Brownell's correspondence with his family. Most of the material consists of his correspondence with his siblings covering 1988 to 1996, and some correspondence relating to his wife Doris Brownell. There is also a large file of papers compiled by his brother Samuel M. Brownell concerning the administration of the estate of their mother May Miller Brownell. Samuel had served as executor of the estate following Mrs. Brownell's death in 1959, and later gave his file to Herbert. The rest of the items are mostly old family papers, such as news clippings and genealogical information that Brownell had inherited from his parents and grandparents.

The third series contains Brownell's correspondence with his close personal friends, including Warren Burger, John Lindsay and J. Lee Rankin. It also includes his files on activities related to Dwight D. Eisenhower, including the work of the Eisenhower Library, the Eisenhower World Affairs Institute, and the 1990 Eisenhower Centennial.

The fourth series relates to various organizations in which Brownell was active. This includes his file on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution. In 1985 Brownell was appointed to the national commission established to celebrate the bicentennial. The file includes the minutes of the commission meetings and publicity material produced by the commission. The series also includes information on the history of Brownell's law firm Lord Day & Lord, and the work of the Ludwig Institute for Cancer Research.

The fifth series is a general subject file containing material on Brownell's personal activities. This includes information on his trips, his health problems, his book Advising Ike, his interest in U.S. relations with China, and the sale of his apartment.

The fifth series also contains Brownell's correspondence with Miss Dori Dressander, an attorney who was writing a book on civil rights during the Eisenhower administration. This material is especially important because it explains the puzzling absence of any files on civil rights in the main body of Brownell's papers.

The correspondence shows that Brownell had, in the late 1970s, given all his files on civil rights to Miss Dressander to assist her with her work. The Eisenhower Library made an effort to contact Miss Dressander to see if she still had the material. It was learned that she had died in Washington, DC, in June 1999 before completing her book. All her research files had been stored in her apartment. After her death her landlord, not realizing the significance of her work, cleaned out her apartment and all her files were hauled to the dump.

Due to this tragedy Brownell's original files concerning civil rights during his service as Attorney General no longer exist. However, in 1983 Miss Dressander had sent Brownell a rough draft of portions of her book. Dressander's citations show she relied mostly on documents she obtained from the Department of Justice through the Freedom of Information Act, and on interviews with Brownell and his colleagues.

Brownell appears to have saved relatively little documentary material on civil rights. The only original Brownell document definitely known to have been lost was his 1957 appointment book. Fortunately, Miss Dressander had transcribed the entries covering Brownell's activities around the time of the Little Rock crisis. A copy of this transcript is in the file.

Researchers will find little documentation in the Brownell papers that relates to his role in civil rights matters. Brownell maintained in his personal files only a modest amount of civil rights material and that, unfortunately, was lost to history. In the late 1970's, Brownell loaned his small file of civil rights-related material to a researcher. The materials were not returned to Brownell before either his death or the death of the scholar, and the file was inadvertently destroyed before it could be obtained by Brownell's heirs for deposit in the Eisenhower Library.
