

EISENHOWER, DWIGHT D.

POST-PRESIDENTIAL PAPERS, 1961-69

1967 PRINCIPAL FILE

Series Description

This series constitutes the main office file of Dwight D. Eisenhower's Gettysburg Office. It is divided into two subseries. The first is a forty-five box subject file arranged by categories, such as appointments, foreign affairs, gifts, invitations, messages, public relations, publications, speeches, servicemen, and trips. The second subseries is a twelve-box alphabetical file arranged by the name of the individual or organization corresponding with Eisenhower. Documentation in this series includes correspondence, memoranda, transcripts of interviews, drafts of books and articles, statements, messages, schedules, and reports.

Eisenhower's small office staff was inundated with over sixty thousand letters and cards a year. The bulk of the correspondence related to routine matters, including appointments, invitations, autograph requests, etc. General Eisenhower and Colonel Schulz developed a set of guidelines, policies, and rules which the staff followed in handling this correspondence. Autograph seekers were limited to one Eisenhower autograph. Eisenhower did not autograph books he did not write, currency, items not related to him, or likenesses of himself. The ex-president did not write forewords to books, fill out questionnaires, or agree to interviews over the telephone. He declined to comment publicly on the literary efforts of other writers. Requests for financial help were generally turned down by his staff, and most requests for personal items for charity auctions and benefits were also denied. Memberships and honorary positions in numerous organizations and projects were declined by Eisenhower, if he felt he would be unable to participate actively or at least keep informed about it. Memberships in organizations that were not national in scope or dedicated to the public good were also declined. Individuals who sought to purchase or obtain a painting by Eisenhower were informed that this hobby was a personal matter and that he did not allow his paintings to be bought or sold. He gave paintings to family members and personal friends. Servicemen who sought Ike's aid in dealing with the military establishment were informed that the General no longer had any jurisdiction in this area and did not believe in injecting himself into a situation where he had no control or authority. The bulk of the invitations in this series are declined. Reasons for the declinations include orders from his doctors to limit his activities, the great demands on his time, and his contract with his publishers.

In 1967 Dwight Eisenhower continued to carry on correspondence with a wide variety of prominent individuals, including Ronald Reagan, Ayub Khan (President of Pakistan), Billy Graham, Governor Romney, Senator Charles Percy, Gerald Ford, General Westmoreland, Nelson Rockefeller, Richard Nixon, Vernon Walters, Arnold Palmer, Bob Hope, Queen Elizabeth, Sam Goldwyn, and many more. He was interviewed by prominent journalists, such as Relman Morin, Walter Cronkite, and Bill Lawrence and by other writers and historians. This series contains transcripts of a number of interviews as well as articles based on interviews with Eisenhower.

At Ease: Stories I Tell to Friends was published and released by Doubleday in 1967. The publisher sent Eisenhower copies of reviews of the book, sales figures, and advertisements promoting the book. Numerous individuals wrote regarding details in the book, requesting an autograph, or simply expressing approval of the volume.

In letters, statements, interviews, and articles Eisenhower expressed his views on a number of important issues, events, and trends. Vietnam, the Middle East, population control, the U.S. economy, deficit spending, the role of the President, the Miranda decision, crime and delinquency, Social Security, universal military training, and the “war on poverty” program are some of the subjects he commented on. Religious faith was also mentioned in some of his correspondence. He wrote a lengthy letter to a college student on a citizen’s responsibility to his country and to his God and reflected on the dilemma a conscientious objector might face. Besides current 1967 issues, the correspondence also discussed various aspects and strategies of World War II, past political campaigns, and the events of the Eisenhower Administration.

The 1967 Principal File offers an array of documents with items of historical interest and trivia relating to different periods of Eisenhower’s life. Eisenhower’s boyhood hero, Bob Davis, the General’s first efforts to paint, the burial of a canary in the White House garden, the fact that Ike did not like to watch himself on television, and the acquisition of a border collie puppy, “Robbie,” are some of the tidbits which come to light in this series.

The ex-president was hospitalized at Walter Reed Hospital for two weeks in May, ten days in August, and two days in October. He spent another two days there in July for a thorough check-up. Health problems are frequently mentioned in his correspondence. Golf continued to be his favorite sport, but he often complained that his health prevented him from playing.

A number of items have been removed from this series. Forty-three items have been transferred to the museum. One hundred and eight-six still photographs, twenty-one negatives, five slides, three color transparencies, and one 45 rpm record have been sent to the audiovisual collection. Thirteen printed items were transferred to the Book Collection. Fourteen pages of documents were closed under the donor’s deed of gift. Four hundred and eleven pages of original documents were removed, placed in the Preservation File in the vault, and replaced with Xerox copies. There are no security classified documents in this series.

The 1967 Principal Files provides fascinating documentation on the ex-president’s views on many important social, economic, political, and foreign policy issues of the day. Interspersed among the routine correspondence are letters containing unique facts and commentary on everything from Eisenhower’s boyhood period to his presidential years. Ike was aware that writers and historians were analyzing and criticizing his leadership during World War II and his presidency, and the files reflect his response to this activity.
