

LINDY S. JOHNSON
Attorney-Advisor
Office of General Counsel for International Law
National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration

Lindy S. Johnson has worked as an attorney-advisor with the Office of General Counsel for International Law for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) since 1992. The issues for which she is primarily responsible for her office are land- and sea-based sources of marine pollution, environment and navigation, marine protected areas, select coral issues, ship strikes of right whales, and noise and marine mammals. Ms. Johnson participates as a member of U.S. delegations to various international meetings, and has chaired several interagency and international working groups on environmental and navigation interests. In 2004, she published a book on shipping and environmental issues, "Coastal State Regulation of International Shipping." Prior to joining NOAA, she worked as an associate in the New York law firm of Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen & Hamilton and clerked for Federal District Court Judge Judith N. Keep in the Southern District of California. Ms. Johnson received her Juris Doctorate from Tulane Law School, her master's degree in Sea-Use, Law, Economics & Policy Planning from the London School of Economics, and her bachelor's degree in international policy and political theory from Michigan State University.