Kim:

We have been trying to get this information into the hands of those who can expedite the evacuation of individuals who are reporting to us that they are stuck in the hospitals downtown. Here is the information:

Tulane Hospital reported 150 people -- contact Vic Campbell [REDACTED]
 LSU reported 300 people - Doctor Holly Loche - [REDACTED]
 Lakeland Medical Center - unknown number of people - David Jaunet, his wife Stephanie a nurse at hospital. [REDACTED]

It has become apparent that you all are faced with major communications issues and lack of resources in general. If we can be of ANY assistance on either front please reply and we will do whatever you need us to do from this end.

No 225 or 504 numbers are functional at this point. (hence why people are reporting these emergencies up here)

We have gotten the above info to FEMA as well

Done.

FOC: Cell phones are erratic, at best. Messages left on my cell phone last night (from others, not you guys) are just now showing up this a.m. As long as I'm down here, you might remind people of that in case they call through you and want to leave a voice mail on the cell phone.

Mike,

Mickey and other medical equipment people have a 42 ft trailer full of beds, wheelchairs, oxygen concentrators, etc. They are wanting to take them where they can be used but need direction. Mickey specializes in ventilator patients so can be very helpful with acute care patients. If you could have someone contact him and let him know if he can be of service, he would appreciate it. Know you are busy but they really want to help. His number is [REDACTED]

Scooter: Please see below. The trailer idea is worse that I originally thought. Per the data below, the last batch of the trailers that we are now purchasing will be coming off the production line in approximately 3.5 years.

Thanks,

Neil

Neil

Steve of Carol's shop just got a FEMA noon update, and the housing issue came up.

FEMA have set up arrangements to order 200,000 units of trailers (and mobile homes) and committed up to $500 million to do so. They want to get 30,000 units (79% of the existing market) soon. FEMA plans to order another 100,000 units. OMB and OVP staff remain skeptical about this strategy. The nation can produce 6,000 units per month. There is probably some capacity for expansion (possibly by about 10%) to meet increased demand, but we don't know how much. That means most of these units won't be available for use for months. Further, some states, including Louisiana, are balking at the idea of large (25,000 units, as proposed by FEMA) trailer parks. We got all this info from OMB career staff.
