

I still have a couple questions. In this report it states: " The Committee therefore agrees with the conclusion from this formal validation study that the rat skin TER test is scientifically validated for use as a replacement for the animal test " then why are the animals still be killed for their skin? What do you consider "killed humanely"? Why even bother with animal skin when human skin is available? Again, animals used in any testing research is a step in the wrong direction for human use.

Here's a good answer to the chemical testing in the U.S. and overseas! Please read.

Thank you, Jan

<http://www.navs.org/index2.cfm?doc=37,166,18,36,,>