Scope and Content Note

The papers of the family of Oliver Ellsworth (1745-1807) span the years 1762-1907 and contain letters and financial and legal papers documenting Ellsworth's personal life and professional career, records relating to the administration of his estate, and family papers consisting of correspondence, legal documents, and printed matter. The collection's seventeen letters written to Ellsworth and one written by him recount details of his career as a Connecticut lawyer and judge but lack information regarding his public and political life. The accounts, bills, receipts, and land deeds, which comprise the bulk of Ellsworth's papers, provide further particulars relating to his bank and real estate investments, including land interests in Connecticut's Western Reserve, his personal life and finances, and his legal career. A letter written by Ellsworth's son, William, while serving in Congress, 13 March 1830, portrays political and social life in Washington. The remainder of the family papers contains letters written by Ellsworth's children and other family members.

Additional Guides

A printed guide, "A Calendar of the Personal Papers of Oliver Ellsworth," was compiled by Norman F. Boas for the collection prior to purchase by the Library of Congress and is located in container one. The calendar assigns an identification number to each item in the collection and describes all of the material. Although the organization of the Oliver Ellsworth Family Papers reflects that of the calendar, it does not duplicate it. As an aid in locating individual items from the calendar within the present arrangement, corresponding identification numbers are recorded on the outside front flap of each folder wherever possible.
