

Marya Morris, AICP

Marya Morris is a senior research associate at the American Planning Association in Chicago. She is project director for "Planning and Designing the Physically Active Community," an APA research project sponsored by The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation aimed at providing information to urban planners, health officials, and the public on how to incorporate physical activity and healthy lifestyle objectives into community planning. She is also APA's project director for Planning and Public Health," a cooperative agreement with the National Association of County and City Health Officials, funded by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, designed to promote cooperation and collaboration among local planners and public health officials on matters of shared interest, including obesity. Ms. Morris has authored numerous reports and articles on smart growth and urban design including Incentive Zoning: Meeting Urban Design and Affordable Housing Objectives (APA 2001) Creating Transit-Supportive Land-Use Regulations (APA 1997).

Ms. Morris is a member of the American Institute of Certified Planners and has a B.A. in Economics from the University of Wisconsin and a Master's of Urban Planning and Policy from the University of Illinois at Chicago.