Dear Acting Administrator Glavin:

Ensuring the safety of the human food supply is the job of the USDA. It is without question that livestock and poultry that has unsafe levels of veterinary drugs or pesticides be kept out of the food supply at all costs.

Therefore, the USDA's proposal to report the names of livestock and poultry producers who have repeatedly sold animals with unsafe levels of chemical residues should be approved.

Careless livestock and poultry producers that show little regard for the quality or safety of their products should not go unpunished. I therefore, strongly support the aforementioned proposal.

Sincerely,
Phyllis Oliver
